Strange Lady, Aged 109.

Remember Doughnut Month.

4 Added Paragraphs.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

ABOUT 400 YEARS ago Michael Angelo, working on St. Peter's, complained to the Pope about dishonest contractors. Even then they delivered inferior goods.

The greatest artist that lived reminded the Pope that designing and building would do him no good unless it should benefit his soul, for he got no profit from it.

He found happiness in knowing that it would be a source of inspiration through countless centuries.

HOW AMAZED would Michael Angelo be now, where he dwells in a grander cathedral, if he could know that a telephone, part of the system of Vatican City, was yesterday installed in the dome of St. Peter's. And how much more amazed if he could know that the Pope of today, sitting in the dome, could talk with that telephone across the Mediterranean and the Atlantic, to his bishops living in a faraway land that Columbus discovered when Michael Angelo was 17 years old.

MRS. FRANCOISE LEVAPRESTO celebrated yesterday her one hundred and ninth birthday on Staten Island, N. Y. You will nod approvingly at the first three of her four rules of life:

"Hard work, plenty of sleep, and no worry."

But what will you say, how will you look, when you read her fourth rule:

"Always have a bottle of wine for dinner."

How could she possibly have lived to be 109 years old with a rule like that?

BEAR IN MIND please that this is "doughnut month," and concentrate attention on a noble concoction associated with American tradition, and history, as thoroughly as Yankee Doodle or the Star Spangled Banner.

To make a really good doughnut is an art, a public service. To make a piece of sogginess with a hole in it is a crime against humanity.

A doughnut may be as light as froth on the waves or as heavy as remorse. Should it be made with butter or lard?

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S excellent annalysis of conditions in the United States greatly increased its usefulness by four additional paragraphs added at the last moment.

Somebody in the bankers' convention, which President Hoover addressed, had suggested that the standard of living is too high in this country.

Emphatically the President repudiated the theory that the many should live meanly, to enable a few to live in luxury.

He said:

"Not only do I not accept such a theory, but on the contrary, the whole purpose and ideal of this economic system, which is distinctive of our country, is to increase the standard of living by the adoption and the constantly widening diffusion of invention and discovery amongst the whole of our people.

"Any retreat from our American philosophy of constantly increasing standards of living becomes a retreat into perpetual unemployment and the acceptance of a cesspool of poverty for some large part of our people."

THE "NOBLE and manly sport" of prize fighting, permitted in spite of law by politicians that share its profits, produced one of its numerous fatalities in Cedar Rapids, Ia., on Thursday night.

"Kid" Leonard, 17 years old, who had already fought 18 other professional fights, struck "Battling" Nelson, aged 27, married, with four children. Nelson fell to the floor and died.

THE YOUNG MAN that killed him will be held perfunctorily. The prize fighters, encouraged and permitted almost as children to engage in brutal assault, for profit, are not to blame.

The blame is with politicians that, for a share of the money, will license any indecency in defiance of law.

GAMBLING DOESN'T pay. If you doubt that statement, ask an unfortunate man, recently cashier of Charles Scribner and Sons. He confesses thefts totaling $61,000, and adds "all but $1,000 was lost in stock speculation."

Triple humiliation and regret, gambling and losing, confessing and headed for jail. DON'T GAMBLE.

KING GEORGE and Queen Mary have bought five new automobiles, announcing that they do so to give employment and encourage industry. They set a good example that should be widely followed.

Each American in a big way if he can afford it, in a smaller way if necessary, should set that

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—Connie Mack this morning still had everybody guessing. There was nothing definite as to the World Series situation as far as Mack was concerned, but the tall tutor of the championship club is a will o' the wisp when sombody starts to pin him down about his slab selections.

Kid Gleason will not pitch for the American League entry today in the third battle of the series, but in the light of what Connie has done in the past, his friends and acquaintances would not be surprised if he were to throw in one of his young pitchers. In any event, Mack has several hundred newspaper men running around with as many different rumors as one could hear in an A. E. F. camp.

"It's gonna be Grove for sure."

"Make a short-end bet on Earnshaw and you'll win some money."

"Walberg is rarin' to go and he's gonna be in there—I got that right from the feed box."

"Mahaffey will be in there today."

CITY'S LAST DAY TO REGISTER

Pittsburgh voters who failed to register September 4 or September 16 were given a last opportunity to register today. Polls were to be open from 7 to 10 a. m. and 4 to 10 p. m.

To be eligible to register a voter must have a receipt for county taxes issued since November 3, 1928. In order to aid last-minute registrants, Delinquent Tax Collector Walter J. Christy announced that the tax office will be open until 5 p. m. today, instead of observing the usual Saturday noon closing time.

SINGLE VOTE MACHINE ON WAY

McGovern, Inspecting Plant Of Manufacturers, Says It's All Right 'If It Works'

Allegheny County has been promised only one voting machine in October out of the 1,000 ordered from the Poole Engineering and Machine Company, but whether the machine will work remains to be seen, according to County Commissioner Charles C. McGovern, just returned from a tour of inspection of the Poole plant at Baltimore.

McGovern said:

"I guess they can build a machine all right—they showed me enough parts and promised that one of their machines would be brought to Pittsburgh before the end of the month, but the big thing is, will it work?"

TELLS OF EXPLANATION

McGovern visited the Poole factory in Baltimore yesterday, and talked with officials, who reiterated their former explanation for the delay, declaring that the injunction proceedings had halted work temporarily, and promising to make good on the contract with Allegheny County under the terms of the 90-day extension agreement entered into with the commissioners a week ago.

McGovern said he talked with S. Proctor Brady and several Poole engineers. They toured the plant with him and showed him one machine in the process of assembly.

'WILL IT WORK?'

McGovern said:

"They have a fine plant and modern equipment. I can see no reason why they cannot build voting machines. They say that after completing the first machine, production is just a matter of detail, but it remains to be seen whether their first machine is a success."

McGovern got a jump on his colleague, Commissioner E. V. Babcock, in his visit to the Poole

JOB OFFER CAMPAIGN OPENS

Sun-Telegraph Launches Plan To Aid Unemployed In District Obtain Work

The Sun-Telegraph today begins an effort to relieve the unemployed in Pittsburgh.

It prints a coupon to be filled out by employers who need men or women for any kind of work, temporary or permanent.

This coupon, when returned to the Sun-Telegraph, will be turned over to the proper city or county bureau for attention.

CAPABLE WORKERS

Thousands of men have applied for 700 emergency jobs offered by the city. Only a comparatively small percentage of these men can be put to work.

The majority of these men are capable workers with good references. Temporarily out of work, they are seeking any sort of labor that will tide them and their families through a period of depression.

Hundreds of citizens of Pittsburgh have work that must be done this fall—walks to be fixed, lawns to be cut and cleaned, cellars to be whitewashed, furniture to be moved. The fall housecleaning period is at hand.

ALL PITTSBURGHERS

Thousands of men and women are anxious to get work of this kind. Every man and woman sent will be known to the bureau. Every one will be a Pittsburgher who is in need.

Mayor Charles H. Kline, members of Council and heads of city departments are trying to relieve the present unemployment situation. The "I Offer a Job" coupon published today by the Sun-Telegraph is designed to aid them.

If you have a job of any kind in your home or store or garage, any job at all, big or little, fill out the coupon and mail it to the Employment Aid Bureau of the Sun-Telegraph.

BABY DROWNED BY KIDNAPERS

WAYNESBURG, Pa., Oct. 4.—Kidnaped from its crib last night, the 4-month old daughter of Paul Lewis, near Waynesburg, was discovered drowned this morning in a milk house within 50 yards from its home, according to Waynesburg police. A purse, containing $40, was also reported missing from its home by the father.

Lewis told police that he had gone to the crib of his child during the night, only to find her missing. He immediately roused the neighborhood, who called police. Lewis later discovered the loss of the money.

No trace could be found of the kidnapers, according to police, and no motive has been ascribed for the act. Police are continuing the investigation.

LINGLE SLAYING SOLVED, 3 HELD

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—(INS.)—Three members of Indiana's notorious Traum gang stood accused today of plotting and executing the bold slaying of Alfred (Jake) Lingle, racketeering reporter, following the surprise confession of Frank H. Bell, bandit and two-time graduate of Leavenworth Penitentiary.

Bell went before a hastily summoned coroner's jury last night and confessed driving the automobile which carried the Chicago Tribune reporter's killers to the mouth of the Randolph street pedestrian subway, where Lingle was put on the "spot" in broad daylight June 9.

Declaring that he drove the death car, the ex-convict said he was accompanied by Joe Traum, the Indiana gang leader, and Richard Sullivan, both veterans of Leavenworth. At the death scene they met a man who resembled the picture of Ted Geisking, Traum gangster captured in

SHOTS HAIL ON VICTIMS IN STORE

Bootleg War or Jealousy Over Woman Blamed; Slayers Flee in Auto

Gangster guns blazed in the grocery store of Joseph Lobianco, 419 Sixth street, Braddock, this morning, leaving a trail of three dead and one believed dying. Two gunmen and an accomplice are being sought.

The dead are Lobianco, 30, who opened the store three weeks ago; his wife, 27, and Louis Tomano, 70, of 618 Margaretta street, Braddock, a customer.

Michael Lobianco, 28, brother of the proprietor, is in a critical condition in the Braddock General Hospital. He was taken to the operating room, with little hope for his recovery, according to attendants.

According to residents of the neighborhood, three men drove up to Lobianco's store in a red sedan shortly after 9 o'clock. Two alighted and entered the store while the third remained at the wheel with the motor running.

LEAP INTO CAR

A moment later the sound of shots came from the store. The gunmen were seen to run from the store, leap into the waiting car and speed away.

Pedestrians ran into the store and found Lobianco dead from bullet wounds in his abdomen. His wife, similarly wounded, died a few minutes after being admitted to the hospital. The death of the aged Tomano followed.

RUM WAR OR JEALOUSY

County detectives and police began a hunt for the slayers, described as Italians. A car, thought to be that in which the gunmen fled from the scene, was reported found in North Braddock two hours later.

Detectives were working on the theory that a bootleg war or jealousy over Mrs. Lobianco was the cause of the shooting.

Pope Blesses Pittsburgh Laymen in Note to Bishop

Pope Pius XI, in a special message to Bishop Hugh C. Boyle, of the diocese of Pittsburgh, has sent his special blessing to all men who take part in the Eucharistic Day ceremonies at Forbes Field on Sunday evening, October 12, and has further authorized Bishop Boyle to grant a plenary indulgence to all Catholics in the diocese who will receive holy communion on that day.

This is an unusual privilege, granted only on special occasions, and Bishop Boyle immediately dispatched a special message to all priests in the diocese informing them of the Pope's action, and urging them to make full and complete announcement of the message from Vatican City at all masses tomorrow.

Another announcement in Bishop Boyle's letter to the priests is that he grants permission to each of them to appear at the Eucharistic Day ceremonies vested in cassock, white chasuble, alb and amice. This is the manner in which priests are vested when they say mass, and it is only upon rare occasions that they appear in other church ceremonies so vested.

Dix Faces Quiz on Fake Tax Return Charge

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 4.—(AP.)—Samuel T. Curson, former deputy internal revenue collector at Los Angeles, was at liberty today on $5,000 bond after his surrender to federal authorities on charges he manipulated the 1927 income tax returns of Richard Dix, motion picture actor, in such a manner the actor escaped payment of $15,000.

Dix is to be summoned for questioning, United States Attorney Samuel McNabb said the actor would have to explain many things in connection with his sworn return, and there may be additional civil or criminal action.

The indictment charged Dix, whose real name is Ernest C. Brimmer, received a gross income of $241,827.48 in 1927 and was entitled to deductions of $32,672.05, leaving a tax of $43,517.60. Curson, the indictment alleged, prepared a return which reported a gross income of $232,643 and made reductions of $61,535.89, which left a tax of $28,835.54.

DAVIS LAUDS SAFETY DRIVE IN REDUCING DEATH TOLL

LABOR CHIEF SPEAKER AT MEETING

Congress Ends Session Here; Fatalities Reduced by Third In 18 Years, Records Show

The death rate in American industry has been cut nearly a third in the last 18 years, Secretary of Labor James J. Davis told delegates to the National Safety Congress at the banquet in the William Penn Hotel last night which marked the close of the congress. The cabinet member said that there is no subject before the country of greater importance than accident prevention.

The banquet last night was the feature of Pennsylvania Day. Secretary Davis spoke on the same program with Senator David A. Reed, I. Lamont Hughes, president of the Carnegie Steel Company, and Mayor Charles H. Kline. Mayor Kline made an address of welcome to the 1,000 delegates who filled the banquet hall.

PRAISES RECORD

Secretary Davis stated that the roll of 97,000 dead from accidents last year sounds like the casualty list of a war greater than that of 1918. He praised the National Safety Council for its record in cutting down accidents. He declared that education for the employe and the use of safety appliances provided for him were the great needs of industry.

W. H. Cameron, managing director of the national council, announced that attendance at the congress here, although not yet completely checked, is believed to equal the 7,000 who attended the last year's gathering in Chicago.

PENNSYLVANIANS SPEAK

Throughout all of yesterday Pennsylvanians were the speakers. They included Benjamin G. Eynon, state registrar of motor vehicles; Burton W. Marsh, traffic engineer of Philadelphia, who until recently held a similar post here; Lieut. Gov. Henry A. Reninger, past president of the National Safety Council, and William L. Thatcher, secretary to Mayor Harry A. Mackey, of Philadelphia.

At a foreman's forum in Syria Mosque the speakers were: Peter Glick, state secretary of labor and industry; John A. Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, and M. P. Grady, a foreman of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

MATE MISSING, WIFE SUICIDE

NEW BRIGHTON, Pa., Oct. 4.—Brooding over the disappearance of her husband, Louis F. Neil, gasoline station proprietor last January 16, Mrs. Ida M. Neil, 55, shot herself through the heart at her home here, the coroner's office reported.

Mrs. John Morgan, a neighbor, seeing the blinds down, entered the house to find Mrs. Neil's body on the bed with a .22 caliber revolver nearby.

Mrs. Neil's husband disappeared while on his way to his gasoline station in Bridgewater. A hat and a set of false teeth, identified as belonging to Neil, were found along the bank of the Beaver River. State police said they believed the man had been murdered and his body thrown into the river.

plant yesterday. Babcock telephoned the Baltimore factory yesterday, planning a personal inspection trip, but was told that McGovern already was there.

He expressed confidence in the company's ability, and said he was glad to see competition in the voting machine business.

ANOTHER FAILURE

The Poole company's inability to deliver voting machines according to contract in Northumberland County has thrown that community into confusion. The contract was made 14 months ago, and according to the agreement 60 machines were to have been installed.

October 1 was the date set for the delivery, but none has been received from the Baltimore concern. Arrangements were made to conduct the November elections by machine voting, and these plans have not been changed.

No request has been made by the Poole company officials for an extension of time, and no formal action has been taken by county authorities on the matter of reverting to the ballot election.

LOCK-OUTS ORDERED

That the 600 automatic voting machiens ordered for Philadelphia County must be equipped with a special "lock-out" device was ruled yesterday by William T. Connor, counsel for the County Commissioners.

He declared that the machines must have the devices to conform to the law. He also told the commissioners that the specifications under which the machines were bought provided for the "lock-out" device.

CHINESE BANDITS captured two British women missionaries, demanded a ransom, threatening death.

Their demand for $25,000 was refused. They cut a finger from one of the unfortunate missionaries, Miss Nettleton, and sent that to the authorities, saying they would accept $5,000, but would kill the two elderly women if the money did not come.

The Rev. W. Cash, secretary of the Church Missionary Society, said he dared not pay the ransom. If he did so, kidnaping missionaries would become a business.

Ransom was refused, the two women have been killed, England is much excited, although British authorities also opposed payment of ransom that might endanger the safety of all foreigners.

POLICE LAXITY ON LOTTERY HIT

Magistrate Ray Schneider demanded to know why the police didn't get the "big fellows" in the numbers writing racket when a Negro was arraigned before him in North Side Police Court today, charged with writing numbers for the clearing house pool.

Schneider said:

"I am sick and tired of having these men who don't know anything about the operation of the pool brought in here. Why don't you get the men who are running this lottery?"

The defendant, Henry Jones, of 113 East Jefferson street, told the magistrate he worked for a man named Schwartz, who has a store at Sixth and Wylie avenues.

Patrolman Thomas English testified he found slips in the Negro's possession, but had not seen him writing numbers. The Negro was fined $25 with the option of 30 days in jail.

DRY DEFENDERS UPHOLD LAW IN RALLY HERE

Church Leader Brands Plea For State Control of Liquor Traffic 'Silly'

More than 3,000 men and women who crowded Memorial Hall last night heard the Rev. Dr. Mark A. Matthews, former moderator of the Presbyterian Church, defend national prohibition in an address in which he declared that the dry laws have resulted in great good to the country despite publicity to the contrary.

NO PERSONAL LIBERTY

The meeting was called by a group of laymen of various denominations and was sponsored by prominent citizens.

In his address Dr. Matthews declared that there is no such thing as "personal liberty," continuing:

"The only liberty possible is liberty under the law. You cannot have liberty without law.

"Prohibition did not create the bootlegger, the moonshiner and the speakeasy. Nineteen years before prohibition there were, according to records recently published, 2,300 speakeasies in Pittsburgh.

"Financially, prohibition has not been destructful to the country. Bank deposits and industrial insurance show a great increase since prohibition."

He charged a "deadly conspiracy" against the Constitution, and said that attacks against President Hoover in many magazines are aimed at breaking down respect for the administration.

URGE 'FAIR PRESS'

On motion of the Rev. Dr. W. Wofford T. Duncan, the meeting adopted a resolution protesting to editors and publishers of newspapers "the utter misrepresentation, by anti-prohibition headlines, of facts favorable to prohibition which they print in their columns, and calling upon them to stop this misrepresentation and be fair."

STATE PLAN "SILLY"

He branded as "silly on the face of it," the proposal that states take over the regulation of the liquor traffic.

At the conclusion of the address John G. Buchanan, who presided, read a telegram from Prohibition Administrator John D. Pennington, in which the latter said:

"I am more than ever convinced of the ultimate success of national prohibition."

Dr. Matthews was introduced by Dr. C. W. Petty, pastor of the First Baptist Church. The opening prayer was delivered by Dr. Albert E. Day, pastor of Christ Methodist Episcopal Church, and the benediction by Dr. A. R. Robinson, pastor of the Sixth United Presbyterian Church.

Louisville, Ky., and now under arrest in Indiana, Bell said.

$10,000 MURDER FEE

The gang was to have received $10,000 in cash for the slaying, but they never collected the fee, Bell told the jurors. Bell was arrested for the slaying of Christ Patras, cafe owner, who was to have paid the $10,000 for Lingle's murder, but refused. Patras, according to Bell, was the agent of Jack Zuta, North Side gang leader, slain later at a Wisconsin summer resort for his part in the reporter's death.

Patras refused to pay for the killing and Sullivan and Bell shot him dead, Bell said.

Sullivan was identified in the slaying of Patras and is now a prisoner in the county jail. Traum is a prisoner at Leavenworth at present.

Bell's story definitely lays the plot to the North Side Aiello-Zuta-Moran gang, from whom Lingle had collected for protection of their various illegal enterprises and then failed to deliver the protection for which he contracted, police agreed.

Police have corroborated practically every detail of Bell's confession and said they were convinced the story told the coroner's jury was true.

Grand Jury Links Police In $100,000,000 Racket Plot

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—(INS.)—Charges of a definite alliance between Chicago crime and the police and politicians were made today in a report left by the disbanding September grand jury following a survey of racketeering in Chicago and Cook County.

Racketeering, the jurors charged, is the result of indifference on the part of the citizenry and authorities while crime in general results from an alliance between police, corrupted politicians and the gang elements.

So great has the alliance in Cook County become, according to the report, that racketeering methods cost the citizens $100,000,000 annually.

CUBA MAKES PRESIDENT DICTATOR

International News Service.

HAVANA, Oct. 4.—President Machado's request to the Cuban congress for suspension of constitutional guarantees in the Havana region was approved early today at a special session.

The measure, to become effective as soon as published in the official gazette and signed by the President, will invest the executive with dictatorial powers in the specified region.

This drastic step was taken by President Machado to prevent disorders during forthcoming elections, and immediately after hundreds of University of Havana students staged a riot in which scores were injured and one person was killed.

REVOLT PLOT FEARED

In well-informed circles it was understood that the more fundamental aim of the government in assuming dictatorial power is to be ready for any revolutionary outbreaks expected almost momentarily.

Led by former President Menocal, the opposition party was said to be awaiting the ripe moment for a coup to seize power.

Information indicated that wholesale arrests soon were to be made from a list of 300 names compiled by government agents who investigated subversive activities.

CUBANS LEAVING

Many prominent Cubans already have departed for the United States, and an even greater exodus was expected today via plane and steamer. The city remained calm and under guard, but the situation was regarded as critical.

Juan Marinello, well-known Latin-American poet and auxiliary professor in the University of Havana, was indicted with two others on charges of seditious activities among students. Bond was not admitted them.

REFORMATORY MATRON SLAIN

GLEN MILLS, Pa., Oct. 4.—(AP.)—The body of Mrs. Marie Rhout, a matron and instructor at Glen Mills reformatory, with five wounds in the breast, was found yesterday in her cottage on the state reservation. Two of the wounds, which, police said, had been inflicted either by bullets or by another weapon, were close to the heart.

More than 600 inmates and about 50 employes at the institution were kept within bounds of the reservation today pending an investigation.

Moran, Ex-Detective, Held After Fight

P. E. (Happy) Moran, former city detective, was to be arraigned in North Side Police Court today as a result of a free-for-all fight in a house at Mexico street and Cottage place, Woods Run, shortly after midnight.

Police said he attempted to force his way into the place where a party was in progress and was severely beaten by L. B. Jones, 23, and another man who escaped.

Coolidge Lauds Baseball As Benefit to Nation

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Oct. 4.

To the Editor of the Sun-Telegraph:

Baseball is our national game. It is peculiarly a local product with the widest popular appeal of any sport. This is because every play can be seen and the game is so easily comprehended that all its fine points can be appreciated. Moreover, while the expense of maintaining a professional team is very great, attendance is so large that admissions remain at popular prices.

Calvin Coolidge

It is natural to enjoy a contest. But the interest in baseball is not only from the matching of the skill of the opposing teams. Although the spectators do not touch the ball they nevertheless play a prominent part. Even a championship match with only one beholder would not be baseball. The outdoor air and the relaxation from care are partly the attraction. We go to the game in the hope that with three men on bases the batter for our team will drive the ball over the fence so that we can revel in the intoxication of crowd delirium. That is the common touch of nature reaching from the street urchin to the President which lures us all to the ball field.

While the national sport flourishes we can be sure the race is not growing old.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED BY RULERS

International News Service.

ROME, Oct. 4.—A 12-year search by King Boris, of Bulgaria, for a consort to share his throne was ended today with official announcement by King Emanuel and Queen Helena, of Italy, of the engagement of their daughter, Princess Giovanna, to Europe's "bachelor king."

The early part of next month was tentatively fixed for the wedding, which will be performed at a private ceremony by Cardinal Maffi, Catholic prelate, and Metropolitan Stephan, representing the Greek Orthodox Church.

RELIGION NO BARRIER

Difficulties which the Vatican previously found in the possibility of such a union were smoothed out, it was reported semi-officially, under an agreement that all children resulting from the marriage with the exception of the first son would be brought up as members of the Catholic church.

The first son, who would be Crown Prince of Bulgaria, and heir to the throne, will be reared in the Orthodox church. As soon as he reaches his majority a special Papal dispensation is to be issued that will deal with his status in respect to his religion.

FAMOUS BEAUTY

Princess Giovanna, third daughter of the Italian Royal family, is 23 years old. Famed for her beauty, she was first mentioned as Bulgaria's probable future queen four years ago. Boris, now traveling incognito somewhere in Europe, is 35.

OBSERVES 50 YEARS OF PROGRESS

By WINIFRED BLACK, Universal Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 4.—The San Francisco Examiner is 50 years old as a morning newspaper.

In the year 1880 George Hearst diverted his attention for a little from copper and silver and gold and grazing and stock raising, and turned his keen, practical, honest and courageous mind to politics.

So he bought a little evening paper, gasping out a feeble life of painful effort, and turned it into a morning paper.

STIRRING TIMES

Those were strange times, not only in California but all over the world, or at least they seem strange times to those of us who live in the present epoch.

Rutherford B. Hayes was President of the United States.

Victoria was Queen of England, and Albert Edward, the Prince of Wales, set the fashions for men in cravats and riding clothes.

The town was "wide open" and no one ever dreamed of closing it for one single minute.

The Southern Pacific had clutched the state in a terrific embrace that bid fair to kill all independence, enterprise or even hope or ambition.

The new morning paper didn't pay and, worse than that, nobody read it.

Just as Senator Hearst was making up his mind to give the paper away, if he could find anyone who would take it, his son, William Randolph Hearst, came home from college.

"I'd like to run that paper of yours," said young Mr. Hearst, quite seriously.

"But the mines and the ranches and the other projects," said the senator, "I was hoping——"

"No," said young Mr. Hearst, "I'd like to try the paper."

"All right," said the senator, and all right it was.

Before the new editor had had charge of the paper for six months San Francisco knew somebody had come to town.

REFORMS BEGUN

Grafters were exposed. Thieves were prosecuted. Slippery deals in slippery politics were brought to light.

Old wrongs were righted. News, more news and more news again.

San Francisco newspapermen threw away their cuff shears and some of them even began to buy homes of their own and act like real human beings with a little real money in the bank.

The San Francisco Examiner wanted real newspapermen and the Examiner paid real money for real work.

Somebody said the ferry boats were dangerous because they had no drill for life saving.

An Examiner reporter jumped overboard opposite Goat Island and proved that what somebody said was right.

Young women were being ill-treated in the receiving hospital.

An Examiner reporter fainted in the street and exposed the outrageous conditions so effectively that the governor wired from Sacramento and said:

"Remove all officials first, investigate afterwards."

AIDS FIRE STRICKEN

When San Francisco, home of the Examiner, was laid low by the great fire of 1906, Mr. Hearst bought food and clothing and other needed supplies for the destitute and suffering thousands of the stricken city and sent them by special trains from Los Angeles.

A square deal.

An even chance for the poor as well as for the rich.

Clean politics.

These were the Examiner's slogans and they were something besides slogans, they were road maps by which the paper found its way out of the wild disorder of the early times of its existence into the broad, sure, open road to honest and efficient service.

KEEPS ON GROWING

Fifty years old today, the old paper that has stood for America, for California and for San Francisco, first, last and all the time.

On the day the morning the Examiner was born there wasn't an electric light or a telephone, or a wireless station, or an automobile, or an airship in even imaginary existence.

The paper has grown with the times, and sometimes ahead of the times, and it is going to keep on growing.

3 YOUTHS HELD IN ROBBERY

Three South Side boys, all 17 years old, were held for court yesterday by Justice of the Peace Ira H. Edmundson, of Mt. Lebanon, in connection with the hold-up of a grocery on Washington road, Bethel Township. They were committed to jail in default of $4,000 bail each on charges of entering a building, carrying concealed weapons, pointing firearms, robbery and automobile larceny.

They gave their names as Joe Dabroski, of 131 South Twelfth street; George Revty, of 54 South Eighth street, and Mike Murin, of 812 Windom street.

It was testified they held up W. S. Mitchell, proprietor of the Clifton grocery, and demanded the contents of the cash register. Mitchell wrested a revolver from one bandit, but was overpowered by the two others. They ran from the store, followed by Mitchell, who captured one.

After a chase through the woods, during which several shots were fired by police, the others were captured near Brookside Farms.

P. Schoonmaker. The court rescinded a previous court order denying a new trial.

At the time of his conviction, his brother, David W. Kuhn, coal administrator in the Pittsburgh district during the World War, was found guilty on a similar charge. The latter after being fined $1,000 was granted a new trial on his appeal to the United States Circuit Court.

Because of illness Attorney Kuhn was unable to appear for sentence. His petition for a new trial said the case involved the same records as in the case of David W. Kuhn.

VOTERS AWAKE, LIBERALS FIND

Arthur M. Scully, chairman of the Allegheny County committee of the Liberal Party, today expressed satisfaction with the manner in which voters are calling at the party's headquarters and manifesting an interest unusually early in the gubernatorial campaign. In a statement he said:

"We are backing a great moral issue because we feel that prohibition, instead of being the blessing it was expected to be, has turned out to be a curse to the nation and we intend to do our utmost toward an eventual repeal before the foundations of government are entirely weakened and destroyed.

"In John M. Hemphill we have a candidate to whom all Pennsylvanians can well rally. We are confident that the people will see in him a splendid opportunity toward making a start in obtaining Prohibition repeal.

"Not only is the candidate we have elected to support a strong man for this task, but the affairs of Pennsylvania generally could be in no safer hands than his, for the Hemphill family has been an outstanding one since the pioneer days of the commonwealth."

Mackey had wired Armstrong that he had canvassed the Republican chairmen of the state's 67 counties as to the outlook for united support for the whole ticket. Mackey said he addressed Armstrong after reading newspaper reports that Armstrong was to manage the Allegheny County campaign. Armstrong's message read:

"It is true that I, being county chairman, will be at headquarters myself. As far as I can see, the Republicans of Allegheny County will support the nomines of their ticket starting off with James J. Davis, for United States senator, and Gifford Pinchot for governor."

Armstrong conferred in his office yesterday with Davis, Judge James B. Drew, nominee for one of the two seats on Superior Court bench, and former Judge Frank I. Gollmar, manager of Pinchot's primary campaign in Allegheny County.

'BAERING' DOWN ON THE NEWS WITH ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER

Henry Ford says we are lazy. Blame it on that old Model T.

It ran on combustion. Its radiator fed on the dew. It took you there and brought you back. And shook up your sluggish liver on the way.

It bedded itself down at night like a faithful hose. During the heat waves, it fanned you with its fenders and rocked the baby to sleep.

Its gears required no more greasing than a dab with a lip stick. It had a natural nose for detours. It never developed mechanical troubles that a Pullman porter couldn't fix with a whisk broom.

It improved with age like an old habit. It would mow the lawn, run the pump and do everything around the farm but lay an egg.

Then they made Lizzie a lady and she's difficult to handle. The change arrived too late. Of all the ruts that man gets into the ones made by the old Model T are the hardest to get out of.

Church Cabinet Consulted On Choice of Pastors; Many Committees Meet

By The Rev. R. T. MURDOCK,
Special Correspondent.

A busy day today faced the clergymen participating in the one hundred and seventh annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in session at the Mt. Lebanon M. E. Church. Committees were meeting in several of the church rooms and delegates from all parts of the conference were consulting the cabinet in regard to pastors for the coming year.

A large crowd filled the auditorium when Bishop Anna Leonard arose to address the candidates for admission into the conference. He said great preaching is the crying need of the hour. The bishop declared the radio will never take the place of the preacher's personality.

The speaker made a sharp distinction between a lecture and a sermon which must be an expression of the preacher's own experience. Part of the address was devoted to the many laymen present and Bishop Leonard urged them not to regard the minister as a hired man "to be hired and fired at will" but rather as the ordained prophet of God, and treated accordingly.

LAYMEN'S SESSION

The laymen met at the Presbyterian Church and the devotions were conducted by Mr. Albert Ross. The report on the state of the church was divided into three parts. The foreign mission field was covered by Dr. D. W. Flint. Developments of home missions was handled by W. F. Allen. The "present day needs of the church" was presented by E. T. Chamberlin, Esq. The churches are too much cluttered up with secular work. The failure of evangelism cannot be laid at the door of the preachers, but is due to the indifference of laymen for this central interest of the church.

Dr. David D. Jones of Bennett College, N. C., introduced his quartet of colored girls who sang some spirituals to the great delight of the delegates.

The report of the committee and by-laws was received and Attorney S. M. Hazlett, in a 20-minute address, told us what he expected from his pastor. Dinner was served at the Mt. Lebanon Presbyterian Church, at which Bishop Leonard and his cabinet were invited guests.

In the afternoon the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society held their anniversary. An interesting feature of this meeting was the presence of Miss Mary M. Whitefield, of Malaya, who delivered the principal address. She is the daughter of Dr. Homer Whitefield, a member of the conference. Mrs. W. L. Wilkenson, soloist, wife of W. L. Wilkenson, was accompanied by Ruth Thoburn Knox, daughter of Dr. J. M. Thoburn, also members of the Pittsburgh Conference.

Rev. E. H. Miller, of Brackenridge read his report. This is a complete record of the membership, Sunday schools, and finances of the churches. It was never read so early in our session or gave greater evidence of accuracy and completeness.

SERIES COMPLETED

Dr. Frank Kingdon, of Orange, N. J., finished his series of lectures last night. He also was present at the banquet of the social service union and spoke in favor of old age pension and unemployment insurance.

The Social Service Commission, Dr. Albert E. Day, chairman, has a report that contains facts of greatest importance, especially on the subject of birth control. The subject is sure to provoke discussion and opposition.

The laymen's meeting in the afternoon adopted resolutions indorsing the Eighteenth Amendment and all legislation necessary to make it effective. Dr. D. E. Cruea, superintendent of the Pittsburgh branch of the Anti-Saloon League, claimed that the preachers were "actually dead on the subject." The laymen also condemned all legislation for modification of the blue laws.

Anniversary of the permanent annuity fund society was observed last night and the society was addressed by Dr. Norman B. Beale of Syracuse, N. Y. Attorney Elmer Kidney, treasurer, announced that the invested fund amounted to $473,000 and yielded a net income for the last year of 5.94 per cent.

Debs Looking Forward To Yale Glee Club Visit on Dec. 27

Debutantes always looked forward to the holiday season, like members of the younger set, because with boys home from Yale and Princeton and Harvard, their stag line can become most excitingly long.

One date debs and their mothers are anticipating, and which will have many attendant entertainments, is December 27, when the Yale Glee Club will come to town. And this year the Glee Club will appear in the impressive new home of the Twentieth Century Club, Parkman boulevard.

Wedding In East

This afternoon a wedding of interest to a great many Pittsburghers is taking place in the garden of the Scandrett estate, "Sotobed," in Idlewild, Orange County, N. Y. And the bride is Emma Landenberger, daughter of Mrs. Eugene Landenberger, of New York and Philadelphia, and the bridegroom is Richard B. Scandrett, Manhattan attorney, and a former Pittsburgher.

Dwight W. Morrow, former ambassador to Mexico, is the best man. Cynthia Beatty, of Syracuse, is the bride's only attendant.

The bride is appearing in her mother's wedding gown of old ivory satin and duchess lace, and a veil of tulle cascading from a cap of duchess lace. Her flowers are gardenias and lilies of the valley. Cynthia Beatty is wearing a frock of golden brown chiffon with a large matching picture hat of velvet. She is carrying talisman roses.

The Scandrett home is beautifully decorated with talisman roses, autumn leaves and garden flowers. After the ceremony a supper dance is being held in the pavilion in the garden, illuminated by Japanese lanterns. And the large, oval swimming pool will be illuminated, too.

Changed 20th Century Club Is Last Word In the Artistic

When the Twentieth Century Club opens it doors on November 6 the members will be the most surprised lot of women in Pittsburgh. What has been done with the $500,000 set aside for the remodeling of and addition to the clubhouse is little short of magical. In fact, the building bears no slightest resemblance, either inside or out, to its former self, and to describe the transformation would defy the richest vocabulary.

No longer do the club members enter from Bigelow boulevard. What was formerly the main entrance hallway is now a magazine room with two odd little grilled windows. The entrance now is on Parkman boulevard either on the auditorium level or up the steps to the balcony level.

The auditorium, by the way, is one of the most striking in the many unusual architectural and decorative notes throughout the building. It will seat fully 1,000 persons, has an iron-railed balcony along three sides and a big stage fully fitted with the newest thing in stage equipment even to a dimmer board. Dressing rooms are tiered on each side and a green velvet draw curtain with silver guimpe adds its note to the general tone of the room which is an exquisite green and silver.

Special Lighting

The lighting here, as in all other rooms, is noteworthy, for the chandeliers have all been especially designed.

Dressing, waiting, powder and check rooms occupy the ground floor, and here, too, there is a huge storage room for stage properties. Two freight elevators and an automatic passenger elevator have been installed. What was once the first floor has been converted into smoking and card rooms and a library, all done in most unusual ways, artistic to the last detail.

One finds oneself lost in the labyrinthian maze of rooms, for it is as if an entirely new clubhouse had sprung up on Twentieth Century property. The former auditorium is now the lounge, which is to be furnished in an exceptionally fine early Eighteenth Century spirit.

The house is largely Eighteenth Century, although some of the dressing rooms show a French influence and others are in the more classical interpretation of the modern spirit.

There is a garden room, a "seasons room," and one with Tahiti murals by Phillip Nesbitt, whose colors aid in the peculiar lighting of this windowless room. Another room is Chinese — black and gold. One has walls of satiny wood pulp and another (where the woodwork is all gold) has walls of grass cloth that change from sheer gold to rose and back again to gold, according to the light in which one sees it. Another unique room is the fan and feather room, panels of which alternate with long, narrow mirrors in silver frames.

Garden Room

The new ballroom will perhaps be the most talked of part of the new club home. It is in green and gold, an extremely fine eighteenth century example of an Adam and Chambers type. The chairs are copies of a Chippendale design, but the most striking feature is the beautiful carved mantel and the oil portrait above it, both of which were taken out of an old English country house.

One could rave all day over the huge kitchen whose length on the third floor is the depth of the new addition. Here are gigantic ranges, with special ones to be used only for pastry. Four electric refrigerators, in fact the last word in all electrical equipment, a salad pantry, an electric waiter, dozens of warming ovens—all part of the new club home, the outstanding note of which is to be comfort and cheer.

College Club

More than 200 guests, numbering among them women prominent in the educational life of the city, members of the American Association of University Women and presidents of various other clubs, attended the reception which the College Club gave yesterday in honor of its new head, Mrs. Ralph E. Davis. The clubhouse was beautiful with a profusion of flowers, which had been arranged by the social committee under Mrs. George Swan. At the tea table, which was done in autumn colors, presided Mrs. Dudley D. Pendleton and Mrs. J. Hartley Anderson. Five of the nine past presidents received with Mrs. Davis and Miss Louisa Knox, chairman of hostesses, was assisted by the board of directors. An artistic musical program was given during the afternoon by Mrs. Christine Adams Jones, cello; Mrs. W. A. Weldin, violin, and Miss Helen Roessing, piano.

It seemed quite appropriate after Mrs. J. W. Young's presidential address on service yesterday before the Dormont New Century Club that the past presidents should look after the serving of the guests during the tea hour. It was president's day with this growing organization, and the chief feature of the afternoon was a splendid current events talk by Judge Sara Soffel. A triple trio from the club choral offered the music.

PARIS FAVORS BLACK CHIFFON VELVET FOR EVENING FROCKS

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, Oct. 4.—The rever is much revered by those who are grateful for variety in the line of the decolletage. For there can be no doubt about it, the rever, whether it be wide or narrow, in front or in back, certainly does lend a new and clever note to the evening frock. Consequently it is utilized by nearly every designer. It introduces a trim and neat note to the most elaborate frock that is most attractive and outstanding even in a season where novel decolletages are the rule, and is much liked by the woman who demands something more than two tiny strands of strass, flowers or tulle to provide the back decolletage of her evening frock. For the back has grown so complicated and important that many dresses have dispensed with it altogether and only start, in back, just where the waist begins.

BLACK CHIFFON VELVET is in more demand than ever this season for both day and evening wear. It is the ideal medium for the dinner frock and as such is used by Worth and other important houses. The dinner frock, from Worth, sketched is of black chiffon velvet and introduces the new one-sided line of the back decolletage and also makes use of the very new wide rever. The bodice is slightly bloused and the flaring circular skirt, formed of empiecements, is draped across the hips and draws in closely at the waistline beneath a large bow of the material.

THE SAME HOUSE is responsible for the ensemble also shown. It is of dark blue cheviot. The bodice is of all-over English eyelet embroidery in light blue on a yet paler blue crepe marocain ground. The short-sleeves are scalloped on the edges as is the flat collar. A one-piece frock is obtained by attaching the bodice to the skirt. The coat is full-length and flaring and has puffed sleeves set in to a deep raglan yoke. The collar and cuffs are of natural muskrat.

SIDE WALKS of PITTSBURGH

Then there was the Piano Movers' Association, an association whose members, newspapermen some 20 years ago, have graduated since into respectability. Their headquarters was Jimmy McKay's saloon at Federal and Robison streets, and Jimmy, now retired, to his memories tells about them.

"They was all newspapermen and the newspapermen in them days was considered so disreputable they couldn't get into City Hall. So I invited them to make my place their headquarters and they would do their telephonin' from my place. They would do more than telephonin'.

"One day there was a flood right below my place and a hurryup call comes from a lady that her piano was being drowned. All the boys hurry down and they find the piano and also the refrigerator in danger. Among them was old Jeff Forner and Stoney McLinn and some others whose names I won't mention.

"Well, one of them takes a look in the refrigerator and sez, 'Boys, the refrigerator is too heavy to move, we'll have to make it lighter.' And they made it lighter. They drank the dozen bottles of champagne, the case of beer and the six or seven quarts of good whisky that was in there. And then they carried out the piano and came back to my place and we got together the Piano Movers Association."

"It was later that what's-his-name, the cop, was walking the Market House beat in old Allegheny. His name we might say was Murphy, because it wasn't. He died the other day. In all his days Murphy never spent a nickel for food and in 42 years on the force he never made an arrest. I was a detective over there myself.

"He would walk from one stand to the other in the Market House grabbing an onion or an apple with his big hands, or two hands he'd fill with peanuts. I remember the fellows in the Market House came over to John Ford, who was commissioner then, and asked him to change cops on the beat before Murphy ate them out of house and home.

"As I was saying, Murphy had never made an arrest in all his years on the force, but one day Charlie Faulkner, who had just come off the express wagon and got a job in the cells, came running into the station house yelling, 'There's a riot at the Market House—there's a riot!'

"One and all we run out and see Murphy tussling with a little fellow that's as thin as a rail. And pretty soon Murphy brings the young fellow into the station house and the desk sergeant sez, 'What's the charge, Murphy?'

"And Murphy sez, very serious, 'Let it open for awhile.'

"Well, we all figger it must be murder or something, so after Murphy goes we slip back to the cell and talk to the young fellow and ask him what he's done. And he sez he ain't done nothin' like they all do, but we promise to help him out if it's nothing serious—and you know he was an inventor and Murphy pinched him because he invented them wire covers to put over the fruit stands, sure as I sit here."

Museum Furnishes Battle Implements for Movie Wars

By HARRISON CARROLL

(Copyright, 1930, Premier Syndicate)

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 4.

An A. E. F. veteran of this city has conceived a novel idea of making the war pay him back for the hardships he suffered in France.

Mary Doran

There is an automobile said to have been Gen. Pershing's staff car. There is a Napier automobile in which Archduke Ferdinand is declared to have been riding when he was assassinated.

There are German spades, Austrian long-range guns, French ambulances, American field kitchens, machine guns and rifles of all nations, and dozens of other articles.

The collection first was put on exhibition in a museum about two years ago. Later on, with the epidemic of war films, the owner found it more profitable to rent his equipment to movie producers. He has enlarged it until now it contains all that is necessary for a small war.

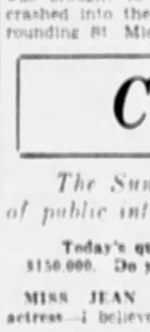
Pictures in which the equipment has been used include "She Goes to War," "Doughboys," "Half Shot at Sunrise," "Hell's Angels" and many others. One of the few war films in which it has not been used was "All Quiet on the Western Front."

EASTWARD BOUND

New York is the Mecca of film stars on vacations. Mary Doran took off by plane today for a brief visit in the East. On her return she does two pictures for Columbia. Irene Delroy makes the same trip by train. It may be that she will not return here until June. Warners are having a play written and may feature her in its New York production.

POWELL NEXT

One of Octavus Roy Cohen's stories, "Alias Mrs. Wallace," will be William Powell's next picture at Paramount.



William Powell

The screen adaptation is now being made by Bartlett Cormack under the tentative title of "Buy Your Woman."

In this picture, Bill will be supported by Carole Lombard. You'll notice the new spell-of her name. She added the "e" on the advice of numerologists.

Man, Woman Hurt In Auto Collision

A man and a woman were in West Penn Hospital today with injuries suffered in an automobile collision in Bigelow boulevard, near Herron avenue, last night.

The accident occurred, police said, when an automobile driven by Roy Evans, 27, of 16 Level way, crossed the yellow line and crashed into a machine operated by George L. Kreil, of 425 South Evaline street. Evans and Mrs. Kreil, 30, suffered injuries about the head and were taken to the hospital by a motorist.

1 Hurt, Score Periled By Runaway Truck

A driver was injured and scores of persons were endangered when a runaway truck careened down South Eighteenth street extension yesterday. The driver, J. N. Newton, of East Liberty, leaped when the steering apparatus broke. He suffered slight bruises, and was treated at South Side Hospital. The truck's wild dash of 500 feet was brought to a halt when it crashed into the iron fence surrounding St. Michael's Cemetery.

CROWS GO TO WAR ON ALDINE SCREEN

By MILDRED FILLMORE

The Two Black Crows, Moran and Mack, go to war on the screen and call their venture, "Anybody's War." It is an episodic affair, with comedy the keynote. And it keeps the two Crows behind burnt cork throughout the action.

"Anybody's War" is the new Aldine screen feature. Its story plot concerns two Negro lads who go to France, land in the trenches and come home with a lot of medals and that sort of thing. And what a homecoming! There are hundreds of dogs and a big brass band to meet them.

One dog in particular figures prominently in the story. And there might be some who'll say it "steals" the picture. Anyway, it arouses a lot of interest. It does the big heroic act on the warfront. And it comes back with a war bride—a dachshund.

SHERIDAN PICTURE IS 'MANSLAUGHTER'

By C. S. KEEFER

Depicting the emotional conflicts of an ambitious young lawyer, torn between love and a sense of duty, and a reckless young society girl with a vengeance complex, only to discover love, "Manslaughter," featuring Claudette Colbert and Frederick March, opened in the Sheridan Square yesterday. It is based on Alice Duer Miller's novel.

Faced by alternative of either sending the girl whom he loves to prison or of renouncing principles which he has set forth, the young lawyer ignores Cupid and pays homage to the god Duty.

Torn from her luxurious surroundings and made to endure all sorts of humiliations during her brief confinement in prison, the girl swears a vow of eternal vengeance. The eventual necessity of changing her mind about that is what makes the climax of the story.

A comedy and news events complete the program.

Wealthy Clubman Found Shot Dead

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Oct. 4. — (INS.)—William Maxwell, 73, a wealthy retired clubman, was found shot to death here. Although police called the death a suicide, investigation now under way may offer a murder mystery.

UNTRUE TO BE TRUE IS SUSIE IN ENRIGHT

By BARBARA WILBERT

One night in the Enright seeing "One Night at Susie's" is one night well spent. Helen Ware, who portrays the character of a very convincing woman, as Susie, speaks the one big line of the show—"The biggest part of loving is giving," and when she says it, you'll believe her.

Billie Dove and Doug Fairbanks, Jr., prove that Susie spoke the truth. It is a story that seems to contradict itself—she is untrue to prove herself true to the man who sacrifices the best part of his life for her. All the crime of the underworld, all the double-crossing of crooks, all the iron bars of Sing Sing could not destroy so great a love as theirs.

On the stage, one of a dancing family trio will amaze you, and that one is the grandfather who fairly outdances his son and grand-daughter.

"The Three Hams" are entertaining, both by their juggling of dumbells as well as by their acting as such.

The dancing choruses are as pretty as they are "peppy." It is needless to say that Dick Powell, with his perpetual smile and winning personality, receives the applause he deserves. Jay Mills, former Enright m. c., is featured in the bill.

Fulfillment

I have not found a substitute for you
In any form of wine or revelry;
There is no single course I can pursue
That offers even brief respite for me;
I know when I find favor in your eyes
The world assumes a gay and magic mien,
The town turns quickly into Paradise,
And all my days are careless and serene.

All this is truth—when I turn down your street
There is a magic in the very air;
Drabness is lost—and life goes strangely sweet,
And when I ring your bell and you are there
Red-lipped and laughing—what is there to do
But to give thanks for romance—and for you?

Old, but Comical

La Guinan, whose night club, "The Argonaut," should be re-christened "Aw-go-naughty!" was in her stale-joke-telling mood. Miss G. told of the veteran hunter who was showing his rooms to a sappy Ziegfeld gel. He pointed to the head of a moose over a door.

"My!" my'd the girl, "what a beautiful, beautiful, beautiful head!"

"Oh," was the nonchalant response, "that one's nothing. I shot him in my pajamas."

"No fooling!" said the dope. "How in the world did it ever get in them?"

Lesson No. 1

First Night Club Hostess. "When you want to give a sucker a present, what do you give him?"

Second N. C. Hostess: "The worst of it."

A Form of Criticism

Two Broadway fly-guys were entering the theater.

"Is his music good?" asked one.

Is My Face Red?

"You're a Winchell-of-a-guy! I am a sincere Rudy Vallee fan and the way you speak of Rudy hurts me deeply. But somehow, no matter what you say, I cannot hate you. If anybody else said one-third the things you say about Rudy I'd be off them for life. With you it's so different. Every time I go to begin to say something about you I get a funny feeling. I love Rudy dearly and I think you also have a little of my love. It is because, I guess, you have a little of Rudy's personality.—Margie."

Omigod!!!

'Jack of All Tricks'

That's what the wags tagged Jack Donahue, one of the Grandest Canyon's grandest sons, whose untimely passing the other morning left a lot of us heartsick. Jack was a champion in so many professions. Only recently he rated a blue ribbon for his amusing magazine articles, and no one can dispute his laurels in the hoofing division, the comedy field and the musical show writing branch.

His sudden death (he was only 38) has frightened so many of us who work strenuously to keep in the Broadway focus.

Donahue's Big Idea during his stage career was: "Leave 'em laughing." He would like his obituary notice here in this manner. So let it be repeated that when a comrade in "Sons o' Guns" broke a leg (which was in a cast for several months) friends inscribed their autographs and other things on the cast.

Jack's inscription was:

"Out of one cast—into another!"

Overheard

The curtain-lifting was advertised at 8:30, and it had not budged by 9 o'clock.

The Tired-Business-Man in Row A on the aisle turned to the t. b. m. in the adjacent pew and chirped: "Wonder what's the matter?"

"Nothin' I hope," was the reply. "Guess they're waitin' for the chorus girls to get undressed."

Incidentally

A terpsicorker in a night club revusical writes:

"Several of us rehearsing in a new night club revue returned to our dressing room and found our purses scattered on the floor. Every girl's purse had been rifled. There are nine in the show. If you don't think times are hard on 'Heartache Highway' listen to this. We all promised to tell each other the truth — about the contents of our pocketbooks—how much we had lost. The total loss was $2.26!"

Imagine

Among other things some of us never knew till last evening was that a juicy racket is "the waste paper racket." One Broadway lad has had the "waste" privilege at three leading hosteleries for quite a spell. He hired workmen to collect all the "junk" paper, had it pressed and bundled, and then he peddled it for a pretty fee to paper mills, which made box-board out of it.

Another angle that makes the racket more profitable is when the hotel gives each guest a free

Nifty

One of those belittling groups (take it from an eavesdropper) was in action again, when someone remarked:

"Where in the world do you suppose Peggy Joyce got all those automobiles, clothes and jewels?"

"Goodness only knows," sighed another.

NOVARRO NEARLY BREAKS HIS HEART IN NEW ROMANCE

By GEORGE SEIBEL

THESE operatic tenors are very susceptible folks. There is Ramon Novarro, who looks robust enough, but nearly dies of a broken heart when the girl he loves, who has run away from a convent, goes back to its sheltering walls. It all happens in "Call of the Flesh," the latest screen romance at the Penn Theater, in which Ramon has the difficult choice between Dorothy Jordan and Renee Adoree.

George Seibel

When he has promoted Dorothy, who has a mellifluous Spanish name, from cook to bride, and has taken her to the Cathedral to have the banns published, her brother comes back from the war and breaks up the match, assisted by Renee, who wants Ramon for herself of course.

You can't blame them for all wanting Ramon, when he looks so gorgeous in Spanish mantilla and sombrero, and sings so magnificently. Ah, but the impresario tells him that he cannot sing in opera until his heart has been broken. It gets badly cracked when Dorothy leaves him, and he makes a terrific hit singing "Vesta la gubbio." But what's the use of that success when he is henceforth confined to a pillow—until a noble mother superior, who is none other than Nance O'Neill, sends his sweetheart back to him.

The scenario wanders a good bit until the beautiful cathedral scene puts it on the right track. Then it goes straight ahead, reversing the good old "Camille" plot, but healing the broken heart and closing with a happy clinch. "Call of the Flesh" is well staged, well acted, and well sung.

While the film is Spanish, the stage show is Indian, with Big Chief Eagle Feather as the principal feature. They do tap dancing and adagio dancing in the Grand Canyon, with a whole tribe of Chester Hale Girls to assist in the ceremonies. Their Burro Ballet was especially effective.

To complete the romantic atmosphere, Oscar played songs of twilight on the organ and Pesetzki conducted his fine orchestra with unusual fervor.

AFRICA SPEAKS STORY THAT THRILLS IN WARNER

By CLARENCE E. GRUNDISH

"Africa Speaks," another wild animal life film, opened yesterday in the Warner. Like the two words of title the picture packs a lot of drama.

A locust horde darkens the screen and darkens the Africa sky. And when the dawn comes it brings a veldt, barren of grass and foliage. A lion pounces on a 200-pound African hog and makes off with it, like a cat carrying a mouse. Another lion pounces on a shrieking native boy. Vultures arrive. And slinking hyenas await their turn.

THERE'S REALISM

The picture looks like the real thing. Anyway, realism is there. Yet, some of the episodes have a "stagey" appearance. A couple big thrill scenes seem in too perfect range of the cameras. But maybe we're wrong. Maybe it is all impromptu stuff. We have never been to Africa.

The picture takes you trekking across the screen through the center of Africa. You are, in reality, a party to the Colorado Expedition as it forces its way through swamp, jungle and across plateau country. All kinds of animals, all kinds of people, are met. There are pygmies with a craving for salt. There are women with crocodile lips. But it is not until the lion country is reached that the film's big punch comes.

TALK AND CAMERAS

A talk accompanies the camera's panorama. And noises, foreign everywhere except to Africa, are registered on the sound screen. The film is enlightening as well as entertaining.

Briefly, "Africa Speaks" is better than most films of its type. It has a sinister, mysterious Africa speaking—but, withal, a fascinating Africa.

Will Rogers Says:

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., Oct. 4.

To the Editor of the Sun-Telegraph:

Mr. Hoover went out to Cleveland Thursday and spoke before the shylocks. I liked his speech. He didn't beat around the bush about anything, he just came right out in the opening paragraph and said we was doing pretty badly (of course he might have suspected that we had already found it out.) He said if we could afford to live through it, things would get better. That advice was directed to younger men. He read a lot of statistics that were mighty encouraging. They told how poor some 15 or 20 other countries were doing. I had no idea that Ecuador was as bad off as Oklahoma, but it is, so before you complain, think of Peru.

Yours,
WILL.

Camera Question Box

The Sun-Telegraph's "Camera Question Box" each day will ask a question of public interest to Pittsburghers and will photograph those interviewed.

Today's question: Costs of "fashionable weddings this season are to range from $50,000 to $150,000. Do you see any advantage in this—even insofar as it puts money into circulation?

MISS JEAN STODDARD, actress—I believe a wedding that would involve great expenditures would be an advantage to money circulation, because as a general thing, it helps the local merchants. Through par writeups, ce city is given an aspect of prominence, and the people are encouraged in ways of money circulation.

Miss Stoddard.

MISS NATALIE WHITMAN, actress.—Such large weddings as are referred to in this question are the exceptions. As a general thing it would put a great amount of money into circulation, but as it is, I believe it aids in a small way. Each lavish wedding is a help to money circulation.

Miss Whitman.

MME. ZETTA, mentalist—The $150,000 weddings are in a class by themselves. I would never advise anyone to spend such an amount on a wedding. $50 is plenty for a working person to spend. I believe there are many better ways of spending money.

Mme. Zetta.

HENRY SCHMITT, manager—My answer to this question is—"yes." These weddings give money to the clothing stores, tailors, florists, orchestras, caterers, decorators, churches, jewelers, and to many others too numerous to mention. Such a consideration of the distribution of expense speaks for itself.

Mr. Schmitt

MISS MARGERY MARTIN, actress—Yes, a wedding such as has been referred to above, does put a great amount of money into circulation. There are so many and such varied expenses that the money is well distributed. In this way, people, whose only aim might have been to outdo the rest of society, are, unconsciously, aiding the public, financial situation.

Miss Martin

JOHN DORSEY, manager.—No, I do not see any advantage to money circulation by these lavish weddings. I think there could be a much better way of circulating money.

Mr. Dorsey.

MASTER MYSTERIES -:- By ARTHUR HOERL

Murders at the Circus

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

Beller, ringmaster of the Beller & Swarney Circus, is killed under mysterious circumstances. Emily, an ill-tempered elephant, tramples him to death. Queen Anne, the star aerialist, is attacked in her wagon-home by an unknown person. Dale, called in by Swarney to investigate, learns that Beller's death was probably not accidental, but deliberate murder. Swarney admits bitter arguments with Beller over ownership of the circus. Beebo, the master clown, believes his daughter, Tito, was wronged by Beller, whom he also hated over a grievance of his son. Cap. Wiegle, the animal trainer, and Queen Anne's husband, is in love with Adele, Beller's widow. Queen Anne refuses Dale any information about her midnight assailant. On the night of Beller's death Emily's watchman was found intoxicated and was discharged. During a night performance Queen Anne misses the trapeze and crashes to the ground. Queen Anne is killed by the fall. The trapeze had been tampered with. Later, Dale is dining with Swarney, in his wagon, when an attempt is made to poison Swarney with the food. This is learned when one of his dogs, fed a tidbit, dies instantly.

Now go on with the story.

CHAPTER VI

More and more Robin Dale realized he was confronted by a mind of diabolical cunning, clever, almost too clever, and utterly ruthless. The new development, of course, hazed matters even more for a time, but it finally gave the outstanding clue of the strange case, the one clue through which it was possible to trace the murderer.

After the night performance Dale walked about the grounds. Aimlessly it seemed, but it was really with purpose. He wanted to speak with Tito. Somehow, he had felt from the first that the key to the situation lay with her.

Beebo scarcely ever left her side, so interviews with Tito had been difficult to accomplish. That night fortune was with him. After the camp had settled down to a spectral quiet, Dale, passing Beebo's wagon, found Tito seated on the rear steps gazing off into space. Dale startled her.

"I'm sorry if I frightened you," Dale apologized.

"That's all right. You like the night, too?" She had a sweet voice.

"Usually, I do. But, around here, I wouldn't think you'd feel safe sitting out alone."

"No one will hurt me." There was a strange, quiet assurance in her statement.

"I'm sure of that," Dale answered. "I wonder do you want to help me and Mr. Swarney and the rest of your friends here?"

"How could I?" she asked, a little startled.

"Don't you know who had reason for trying to poison Mr. Swarney?" Dale answered her abruptly.

She rose to her feet. Dale saw she was agitated by the question. Her voice took on a higher pitch when she replied to him. She was excited and frightened.

"Please don't ask me that! Why do you ask me? I don't know anything about it!"

Then, suddenly and unexpectedly, a deep voice came from within the wagon. A voice which spoke in a commanding tone. Beebo.

"Come in here! I've warned you not to talk! Go 'way and let her be, you meddler!"

Tito ran into the wagon and the door slammed behind her. Dale went slowly, thoughtfully to his own quarters. He did not leave them again until late the following afternoon. All that night and through most of the succeeding forenoon he grappled with the problem. The necessary facts, he knew, were now all in his possession. It remained for him to arrange them in the proper order. This done he knew, from past experience, that the grim tragedies of the Beller and Swarney Circus would no lohger be a mystery.

Those hours he spent alone with his thoughts, his pencil and a pad. He wasted sheets with unintelligible scribble, of odd, fantastic figures that were made absently while his mind strove to grove one conversation into another, incident into incident, action into action. When he finally finished, or toward the end, this is what he had written:

KNOWN FACTS

1. Roy Swarney: His blackjack hit Beeler; he was near the drum when Anne was killed; he is friendly with Tito.

2. Adele Beller: Possible, with Wiegle as accomplice, to have caused Beeler's death; she is constantly with Wiegle; with Beller's death she controls his interest in the circus.

3. Cap Wiegle: Was near the drum when Anne was killed; he had greatest motive for wanting her dead; can marry Adele and gain ownership in circus he now works for.

4. Beebo: Had sufficient reason for murdering Beller; his daughter, Tito, knows something, suggesting that she is one step in the affair of Beebo and Beller. Gains nothing but revenge, and if this is true why try to kill Swarney?

5. Whoever killed Beller has one possible motive for causing Anne's death, namely, to shut her up if she knew the truth of the first crime. No other motive necessary.

6. The important question: Why, under these circumstances, was attempt made on Swarney's life? Why—

There Dale stopped. It was after 11 in the morning and he had not slept. He stopped at that point for he had found the answer. It became crystal clear in one sudden flash. Not once before had it even occurred to him and yet there it was, the only possible answer to the gruesome riddle! He gave a shout of exaltation, wrote one other hypothetical question across the paper and then burned them all.

He had written this line: Who profits the most by these terrible crimes?

"The answer's the same to all the questions!" he cried out triumphantly as the papers burned to black ash in a little bowl.

That afternoon Robin Dale rode into Botsford, the county seat. He sought out Prosecutor Wright, whom he had met on the previous assignment. Dale told his story. The detective aides were sent for and they, in turn, listened in astonishment to Dale's recital. When he was finished he summed up the situation.

"You can see it will be impossible to prove anything against the fiend unless caught in the act of committing another crime. Well, the third crime is going to be attempted very soon. Perhaps tonight. Will you have your men at the circus, Mr. Wright? I'll see that they're scattered about without attracting attention.

It was arranged in that manner. That was Saturday. Directly after the night performance four detectives and Mr. Wright himself were gathered in Robin Dale's wagon quarters.

"It's going to be a fiendish attempt this time, gentlemen, something too horrible even to think about. In some way, the wild animals are going to be connected with it. I don't know just how, but that's the only logical road for the murderer to follow. It's most likely to be the big cage in which the lions perform. That's the most obvious place. I talked to McLaughlin, the crew boss, as we came in. He's going to help us. We'll wait until I get a report from him and then all to our places. We'll have to head off murder, gentlemen! Someone's life is in our hands, remember that!"

Fifteen minutes later McLaughlin came in. He had some startling news.

"Cap Wiegle and Adele left right after the show—they went into town. One of the girls thinks they're going to be married. I couldn't find Beebo either. Tito was in the wagon, lying across her bunk, sobbing hysterically. I tried to talk to her, but she wouldn't say a word for a long while. Finally she blubbered, 'It's too late now—he made me tell him. It's too late!' She wouldn't tell me what was too late, an' I guess she meant that Beebo made her tell him the truth about her trouble. Swarney was missin', too. Hell's gonna pop loose here, I can feel it. Where was Swarney? One of the men said he told him that Wiegle sent for him about some change in the performin' cage. Wiegle monkeys around it every night, you know, testin' the barn and seein' that the cage doors are all locked safe. But Wiegle left camp. Damn it, it's all queer—makes a feller feel creepy, like somethin's crawlin' up on him that he can't see."

This dissertation had been interspersed with brief questions from Dale; short, sharp questions. Dale sprang to his feet at the end.

"We'll have to move fast, men, or we'll be too late! Maybe we're too late already! On a run!"

But they never got past the door before the ominous roar of the lions was heard, and then an ungodly, blood-curdling shriek from a human throat. Shriek upon shriek followed it as Dale rushed madly at the head of the police across vacant grounds. Coming from the opposite direction the first ones they met were Cap Wiegle and Adele Beller.

(Whose shrieks had they heard? Who attempted the third murder? Who killed Jeff Beeler? Who caused Queen Anne's death? What was the motive for the crimes? How had Robin Dale figured the answer to the gruesome riddle? Read the solution in the Sun-Telegraph, a week from today.)

SOLUTION TO

'The Mysterious 3-Z'

By ARTHUR HOERL

Early the next morning Robin Dale was at Capt. Blake's office. They took only Sergt. Jardin with them and proceeded to Brooklyn in one of the police cars. There they picked up Mae Ryerson and Belle Walsh.

They drove on toward the scene of the two atrocious crimes. They went on along Kings highway, turning in at Kings Asylum. They all alighted and entered the main building.

Dale went on ahead while the others waited at the reception room. He wanted to announce their presence to Ostermann. He found the chief clerk, as usual, bent over his desk going over records and files.

"Capt. Blake is outside—we have a little mission to perform here today, Mr. Ostermann—would you mind seeing the captain for a moment."

"Sure, I come right away."

The two chatted as they went through the corridor and into the reception room. At the door Ostermann hesitated as he looked into the room. Dale, behind him, took him by the arm and led him toward the group. The two girls had risen and were staring at the clerk.

As they met in a group, Dale, suddenly and deftly, knocked Ostermann's spectacles from his nose. The men stood there, for a moment, staring open-eyed. At that moment both girls shouted at once.

"That's him! That's the man!"

It took Jardin only a moment to snap the handcuffs on Ostermann. The man made no protest. Now that it was over he seemed merely to slump in his entire body. He hardly looked like the atrocious killer for whom the entire police force of a great city had searched for days in vain.

Of course, there was nothing he could say. The identification of the two girls was too conclusive.

Later, in Capt. Blake's office Robin Dale went a little deeper into the explanation he had started the night before.

"It was a very little thing which started me thinking about Ostermann first. Remember the day the two young ladies went to the asylum for the roll-call? Ostermann, you recall, was never there. His excuse sounded very legitimate at the time. He took me about the rooms searching for evidence. I got to thinking of that and it occurred that he always steered clear of any association either with Miss Ryerson or Miss Walsh.

"Then there was the revolver—a .38 calibre. That is usually the type of revolver used in institutions of that kind.

"While at lunch in his room I noticed, of course, the piles of magazines he was in the habit of reading. I learned, there, that he was unmarried.

"He kept speaking about his association with the insane and how, at times, it almost drove him crazy. That accounted for the slight trace of the insane in his otherwise lucid letters.

"Of course, he had the opportunity, while walking about the grounds at night to see the petting in the adjacent streets. Being a man without a woman of any kind in his life, it got to him, in those half-crazy moments he spoke about. After committing his crimes he found it rather easy to get back onto the grounds of the asylum and cover all traces of his identity.

"He was more or less safe in showing himself because he rarely went outside the grounds and it was scarcely possible that anyone with whom he came in contact would come near the asylum.

"The letterhead of the County Clerk's office was rather important. Ostermann, of course, had access to that office—it is possible that he made periodical trips there inasmuch as Kings Asylum is a county institution. It was meant to be misleading and under ordinary circumstances would have been. Except for the clues which had gone before it might have been very puzzlin'.

"Until the motive presented itself last night it seemed silly even to suspect the apparently inoffensive little chief clerk. But that was the key to the whole situation."

"I don't suppose Ostermann would have ever come to anything like that if he hadn't spent most of his days and nights with insane people."

"No, it required a touch of insanity to cause such deeds as his. In Ostermann's case the touch came from without—and for the greater part of the time we were looking for someone touched with that sinister brand from within, a lunatic, in other words.

"Poor fellow, he merely reflected the weird thoughts and deeds that all of those about him would have perpetrated if they, like him, were free. Now that he's caught I wouldn't be surprised to see his mind crack. There's some evidence of it in those letters of his.

"Poor fellow, romancin' with death and sordidness."

SINGER DENIES MATE'S CHARGE

Mrs. Laura J. Rand, Dormont concert singer, for 10 years in the choir of the Mt. Lebanon M. E. Church, denied the charges of her husband, Percy D. Rand, paymaster of the Crucible Steel Company, of cruelties and indignities in Common Pleas Court yesterday.

Stylishly attired and cultured in voice and manner, Mrs. Rand testified before Judge Sylvester J. Snee, his first divorce case, that she is unwelcome at the Dormont home of her husband, 1464 Greenmont avenue, and is forced to support herself by menial labor at $12.50 a week. She expressed a willingness to return to Rand.

She testified that their 19 years of married life had been unhappy and that her husband objected to her singing. Rand testified, and he was corroborated by their son, that Mrs. Rand had frequently abused him verbally and nagged him and neglected her household duties. They were married September 27, 1909, and parted August 7, 1928. Rand asked a divorce on the grounds of cruelty and indignities.

RESINOL HEALS BABY'S RASH

Doctor Recommended It

"A friend recommended Resinol for a rash which covered my baby's body. I thought that I had better take her to the doctor, however. After examining her the doctor looked up and said, "Have you tried Resinol?" I hadn't so he said, "Try it. I think you will find it is just what you need." I did. Result—my baby is entirely free from skin trouble, rash, or any eruption of any kind. I always keep a jar of Resinol on my baby tray." (Signed)—

SPURT HOLDS IN GLASS TRADE

Reduction in Automobile Manufacturing Activity Lessens Plate Demand

The seasonal increase in orders over a summer of extreme dullness is being maintained in the different branches of the flat glass industry, according to the National Glass Budget. Shipments of window glass are showing some further improvement at the beginning of this month. Manufacturers' stocks will be cut down to some extent during the month, as very little if any change in operating capacity is anticipated.

Shipments of plate glass to the jobbing and mirror manufacturing trades are gaining. They are yet far from the average moved in a year of normal business. Orders from the automobile industry are not up to earlier expectation. Certain of the automobile manufacturing firms are either operating on a part-time or a reduced schedule. Production of plate glass is far below a seasonable average.

PRICES AFFIRMED

Some of the manufacturers of rolled glass have issued new schedules which are understood to affirm prevailing prices. Demand for glass of this kind is extremely low. Production is said to be near a low point for this time of year.

Reports from different sections of the country are not in accord one with the other concerning the demand for sheet glass. In some sections there is an increase in the amount of building and alterations which in turn is stimulating the demand for glass. In other parts there is very little building and jobbers' working forces are being reduced. While there are indications that considerably more glass will be shipped out of the manufacturers' warehouses before December 1, on account of small stocks in jobbers' warehouses, there is no assurance, however, that the increased volume of business will be maintained after that time. A belief held by many is that there will be no lasting improvement until the arrival of spring weather.

Biscuit Shows Steady Rate of Growth

By GEORGE H. SNYDER.

NATIONAL BISCUIT STANDS high among the companies which are passing through the depression unscarred and which have increased their dividends. Directors recently declared an extra of 50 cents payable November 15.

This followed a split of the common stock on a 2½-for-1 basis last March. From the earnings of 1929 the holders of the old stock received dividends of $7.50 a share. This year holders of the new stock have received two quarterly dividends of 70 cents each. Two more of this amount are expected. With the extra this will make a total of $3.30 a share. Figured on the basis of the old stock this would be equivalent to $8.25 a share, or 75 cents more than was paid last year.

The company has been contributing its share to the relief of the trade depression by passing a substantial part of its earnings on to stockholders. The extra dividend amounted to about $3,000,000.

Long Dividend Record

THE RECORD OF DIVIDEND payments is unbroken back to 1899, the year following the organization by the merger of several outstanding companies. The rate of dividends has been upward since that time with the exception of only a few years.

Each year has been marked by expansion at a conservative rate so that at present National Biscuit is the outstanding company of its kind. It operates 65 plants and has 250 branches which receive shipments from factories for distribution to customers. Over 255 varities of biscuits and crackers are produced. Included among its subsidiaries are the National Biscuit Company, Ltd., of Canada, and the Shredded Wheat Company.

Earnings Well Maintained

WHILE BUSINESS DULLNESS has affected some of the company's lines, the major share of the products may be considered in the depression-proof class. Net earnings after all charges for the six months ended June 30, 1930, were $10,036,757. This was equivalent to $1.48 a share on 6,206,755 shares of common stock after deducting preferred dividends. It compared with $10,181,579 or $1.50 a share on the basis of the same capitalization in the corresponding period of 1929.

Earnings have displayed year by year growth with clock-like regularity. They increased from $16,277,158 in 1927 to $17,883,365 in 1928 and to $21,423,571 in 1929. Last year's earnings were equivalent to $8.21 a share on the old stock.

No Funded Debt

AN ISSUE OF $24,804,500 of 7 per cent cumulative, non-callable preferred stock is the only claim on earnings prior to the common stock. With physical properties carried at $89,621,899 after depreciation and with total assets of $133,224,842 the company has no funded debt.

A notable feature of the company's development of recent years has been a steady accumulation of cash. This has taken place simultaneously with plant expansion. Current assets at the close of 1929 amounted to $43,602,943 against current liabilities of $7,364,390. Cash amounted to $10,218,821, government securities to $12,513,641 and other securities to $7,002,527.

ALUMINA BRICK PRODUCTION EXPANDS

Harbison-Walker Makes Super Refractories At Local Factory

Various types of super refractories find application in present day industrial furnace practice. For many years high-alumina brick comprising one of these types have been manufactured only in relatively limited quantities for special purposes or uses. In recent years, however, they have attained an important position as lining material for industrial furnaces and their production has assumed large proportions.

This development has come about in consequence of the evolution which has been progressing more and more rapidly in industrial processes. In the basic industries there has been a definite trend toward concentration of output in fewer plants, with larger operating units and increased efficiency in production. In most cases there have been brought about more severe operating conditions in the various furnaces employed and the result has been that more severe service is imposed on the refractory linings.

LARGE SCALE OUTPUT

The principal raw materials utilized in the manufacture of high-alumina brick are diaspore and bauxite (high-alumina minerals) and crystalline alumina prepared by the electric furnace fusion of selected bauxite. Several alumina-silica minerals are also used, but to a lesser extent. Brick are being produced on a large scale in various classes of alumina content, including 50, 60, 70 and 80 per cent as compared with 38 to 43 per cent alumina in first quality clay firebrick.

High-alumina brick possess certain definite advantages over fireclay brick. They will withstand higher temperatures, it requires higher temperatures to change their chemical constitution and physical properties in service, they have a lower tendency to crack of spall under the influence of sudden temperature changes especially in the high temperature range, they possess superior mechanical strength under heat, they are more resistant to chemical attack by certain types of corrosive slags and their mineral constitution is more stable and their volume more constant.

WIDE DISTRIBUTION

At the present time the largest tonnage of the high-alumina refractories is used for lining the burning zone of rotary kilns, including kilns for clinkering Portland cement; for calcining dolomite and lime, and for reburning lime sludges in the paper and chemical industries. For this purpose special shapes known as rotary kiln blocks or liners are employed. They are made of a number of sizes with curved outer and inner faces to conform to the curvatures of the kiln section.

Harbison-Walker Refractories Company manufactures these super refractories at its Pittsburgh plant situated on the Monongahela River, a few miles from the heart of the city. One of the brands, "Alusite," is very generally used for the hot zone lining of rotary cement kilns in all parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

Exports of Rubber Goods Drop 12%

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—August exports of rubber goods were valued at $5,189,508, an increase of 12 per cent compared with July, according to the Commerce Department.

This advance can be attributed to the large increase in exports of truck and bus casings and to the advent of the buying season for rubber boots and other waterproof footwear.

August, 1929, exports of rubber goods totaled $6,341,197.

Local Engineer Accepts Tour Invitation

J. H. Fox, engineer of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, has accepted the invitation of the National Research Council to take part in a tour of nine of America's representative research laboratories. The tour will start from New York, October 7.

About 75 acceptances from other cities have been received, according to Maurice Holland, director of the National Research Council's division of engineering and industrial research, which is sponsoring the tour.

NATURAL GAS USE GROWS IN DECADE

Review Holds Distributor Dominating Factor In Future of Industry

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Some fundamental factors that underlie the valuation of natural gas securities are discussed by Clark, Dodge & Co. in the current issue of Financial and Economic Review. After analyzing the rapid growth of the industry, potential reserves, cost of production, engineering progrees financial record and other important factors, the review points out that large distributors will be the predominating forces in the natural gas industry to guide its future growth, and that the exceptions will be large holders of natural gas reserves served by pipe lines that will remain wholesalers working closely with distributors.

Holding companies and mergers are the necessary commitments of its transformation into a unified industry. After its initial burst of rapid expansion accompanied by the inevitable exploitation of public interest, the industry is now entering a period of integration which denotes progress toward stabilization.

GAIN IN USE

During the course of the last decade, the rapid increase in the consumption of electrical energy has overshadowed an important growth in the consumption of gas. Consumption of electrical energy during the period from 1920 to 1929 increased 123 per cent compared to an increase of 132 per cent in natural gas consumption, and 64 per cent in consumption of manufactured gas. In the last four years natural gas consumption has increased 8 per cent more than electrical energy consumed. The average annual increase from 1920 to 1925 was 9.77 per cent, while from 1925 to 1929 the increase averaged 11.14 per cent, with 1929 showing an increase of 18 per cent.

Further integration should tend to promote broader activities by the larger public utility units with the advantage of additional diversification of products and markets. Investment merit may be accorded those public utilities whose position is such that they may receive natural gas at a favorable price in quantities to meet their requirements. More efficient fuel encourages domestic and industrial consumption. Accordingly, as long-term contracts are arranged on a favorable price basis, it should be possible to increase revenues without any material increase in plant (or capital) investment. This should increase the earnings with a corresponding enhancement of equity valuation.

GENERAL TRADE LOWER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Commercial transactions during the week ended September 27, 1930, as indicated by the volume of checks presented for payment, outside New York City, registered a decline from the preceding week and were less than the corresponding week in 1929.

Bank loans and discounts of Federal Reserve member banks, although showing no change from a week ago, fell of slightly from the level of loans and discounts for the same period in 1929. The average prices for representative stocks registered a decline from a week ago and were lower than the prices paid during the week, September 28, 1929. Bonded prices, on the other hand, indicating renewed interest of the public in the bond market, showed increases over both comparative periods. Interest rates for both call and time money for the latest week were at a lower level than either prior period. Business failures were less numerous during the past week than during a week ago.

For the week ended September 20, 1930, increases were noted over the preceding period in the activity of steel mills, production of crude petroleum receipts of cattle and hogs, while declines occurred in the value of building contracts awarded in 37 states and in the receipts of wheat at principal centers.

Turn Reached, Woolworth's Sales Show

—By B. C. FORBES—

THIS WILL interest the whole country.

Business reached the turning point in the week beginning August 11, according to Woolworth's sales. Since then each week has done better than the previous week.

Mr. Forbes

President H. T. Parson gave me that heartening information when I asked him if he were doing any considerable buying for distant delivery. He said:

"We have been enjoying lower prices in different stages since last March, and we reduced our inventories up to June 1 $9,000,000 compared with a year ago, which put us in a position to take advantage of the new merchandise offered.

"We have been buying continually to replace our stocks and keep them up to standard, and at the present time they are a little higher than usual on account of the expected increase in fall business.

"The decline in sales with us reached its low point in the week ending August 9. Since then we have shown a progressive increase in sales, each week showing better than the previous week, and our September sales, which are only partially in, would indicate we are going to have a very favorable report to make for September and showing a very great improvement over August."

Does this suggest that ordinary folks are now acting more commendably than some of those partly responsible for causing the recent terrific declines in commodity prices and in stock quotations?

ALREADY LARGE users of wheat who had the courage to buy freely at the bottom have a handsome profit. It is as certain as anything in the future can be that those corporations and other concerns that have had the courage to place contracts at recent low prices for grains, cotton, copper, raw sugar, rubber and other commodities selling at less than what it costs to produce them will be rewarded in dollars and cents.

J. P. Morgan & Co., it may be significant, are among the highups interested in the United Gas Improvement Company, Philadelphia, an organization of far-flung, extremely important ramifications. President John E. Zimmerman of U. G. I. becoming convinced that "the purchase of materials can be made advantageously at this time" has instructed the proper men in the organization to "estimate immediately your needs for such construction and operation materials as you will require during the next several months and place your requisitions for them with the purchasing department." Mr. Zimmerman comments:

"Business conditions in this country are essentially sound, and I look for a steady and gradual improvement."

Will other companies exercising similar enterprise please speak up?

WHAT MAY PROVE infinitely the most important development thus far in the Twentieth Century is going on, very quietly, down in Cuba. Georges Claude, famous French scientist and inventor of that lusty infant industry, Claude Neon lighting, this week succeeded in producing power from the ocean. By sinking a mile-long tube into the cold waters of the ocean and condensing the armer water at the surface, a turbine produced 10 kilowatts.

If 10 kilowatts can be thus produced, is it unreasonable to believe that, with the experience thus gained and the constant increase in scientific knowledge and scientific apparatus, the day may come when a great part of the world's electric power will be derived from the sea? A century hence Claude may be ranked higher than even Einstein.

WILL PRESIDENT Richard Whitney and the governors of the New York Stock Exchange please investigate the extent of short selling and publish their findings?

The public have become convinced that much of America's present tribulation has been caused by short selling in commodities as well as in stocks. Demands that short selling be banned are becoming so widespread and insistent that the politicians may take a hand unless the unwisdom of such a course can be made plain to the people.

Publication of the facts by the stock exchange would at least indicate that those governing the institution are not indifferent to public sentiment. Such publication might conceivably reveal that short selling has not reached anything like the proportions popularly imagined.

Roy E. Brownell, lawyer of Flint, Mich., writes:

"Your column under the title of 'Stock at Bargain Levels, Say Bankers,' should be placed upon the desk of every banker. I have been reading your daily articles for a long time and it is most refreshing to find one who is an evangelist of optimism and good sense. Bankers should be convinced that it is their duty to stop preaching pessimism, and in checking collateral appraise the stock rather than the margin of their loan."

Commerce Bureau Adds Three New Divisions

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—Three special technical divisions are being set up in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, to replace the former Domestic Commerce Division. In them will be centered the Bureau's domestic marketing and distribution research. The Bureau's activities in domestic commerce that have proved of greatest value to American business consist of fact-finding investigations requested by business organizations, which they themselves can not make, and the collection, interpretation, and dissemination of information.

The three new technical divisions are the Merchandising Research Division, the Domestic Reginal Division, and the Marketing Service Division. The work of the first will include all studies on the cost of distribution, credit research, and special surveys made in co-operation with trades and industries.

GRAPHS SHOWING BUSINESS ACTIVITY IN WAITING STATE DURING SEPTEMBER

NOTES GAIN IN BUSINESS HERE

Colder Weather Results In Increased Demand For Wearing Apparel

While slight improvement is noted in the general business situation, the up-current has been slow and in many lines disappointing, according to R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review. Considerably colder weather has resulted in increased demand for wearing apparel, bedding, etc., and jobbers in these lines report some improvement in sales. Official reports show the sales of local department stores in August to have been about 11 per cent lower than in August, 1929, and it is the impression that September sales were also considerably lower than in September last year.

Thus far the jewelry trade has not been very active, although more orders are being received and some improvement is expected this month. Sales of shoes continue rather light, with comparatively light demand for rubber footwear. The building situation shows but little change and the demand for building materials is still decidedly below normal.

COLLECTIONS IMPROVE

There is a slight increase in the movement of sanitary and heating equipment, although business in these lines continues quiet. Manufacturers of electrical equipment are not as busy as they were some time ago, but there is some improvement in the demand for radio equipment. Production of crude oil is at a considerably lower rate, with a demand for refined products showing some decrease. Prices have also been reduced to some extent. The production of bituminous coal shows but little change from the last week, but is over 15 per cent lower than a year ago.

GRADUAL GAIN IN BUSINESS

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Though still disappointing in its speed, gradual improvement in the general level of business activity continues, at slightly more than the seasonal rate, says the Business Week in its report covering the week ending today. The seasonal rise in industrial activity is still irregular and uncertain, but in general trade and in building it is more definite. The business index for the week ended September 27, computed from latest statistics available, shows a further slow rise from 85.8 per cent to 86, which compares with 109.2 per cent in the corresponding week last year.

After a last frantic attempt this week to sell the world back to the cave-man on the basis of a sheriff's auction, the bears in the commodity and security markets were routed by a revulsion to common-sense on the part of the business community. There has been a somewhat sheepish realization that though the high and justifiable hope of vigorous business recovery this fall seems to have gone glimmering, it does not follow that the world is going back to bows and arrows, buggies, cave bungalows and bear skins.

Further improvement during October is fairly certain, but, without a sudden and decisive change in business psychology and banking policy, it is difficult to see from what source to expect trade to gather sufficient momentum in the next six weeks to carry us through the winter onto higher and firmer ground next year.

Standards Bureau Reports Gain In Tests

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—An increase of 27,214 in number of items tested at the Bureau of Standards during the fiscal year 1930 as compared with 1929 and a corresponding increase in fee value of $139,212 were announced today by Dr. George K. Burgess, director of the bureau. A comparison of figures for 1928 and 1930 shows increases for the latter year of 68,513 and $218,497. The total number of items tested during 1930 was 200,726 and the fee value $683,614.51.

These figures are particularly interesting at this time since they show a steady increase in the work of the government's largest testing laboratory during a period when business in general has decreased and when one would naturally have looked for a decided drop in general testing.

GET DATA ON OIL OUTLOOK

TULSA, Okla., Oct. 4.—The divisions of refining and marketing of the American Petroleum Institute have decided to appoint a statistical committee to gather data on the outlook for the next six months to present at the annual meeting of the institute in Chicago in November. The statistical department of the institute also is to present a report.

Secretary of Interior Wilbur, chairman of the Federal Conservation Board, also may be requested to ask J. Elmer Thomas, who was chairman of the committee on petroleum economics, which rendered a report March 25, last, estimating requirements for petroleum and its products, to present another report at this meeting, thus giving a complete view of the situation.

HUPP PASSES DIVIDEND

DETROIT, Oct. 4.—Hupp Motor Car Corporation has omitted the quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share on the capital stock, due at this time.

Du Bois Young, president of the corporation, stated that, in view of uncertain conditions prevailing in the industry and in order to maintain the strong cash position, directors decided to omit the common dividend, due at this time.

As of October 1, cash and government securities on hand totaled $11,135,000, against total current liabilities of $808,000. The company has no other indebtedness of any kind. Inventories as of August 30 totaled $6,500,000. As of October 1, the book value of the common shares in the hands of the public was around $22 a share, of which $10 a share represented current assets.

Propose Large Chain Of Grain Elevators

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—A proposal involving the construction of a chain of over 800 grain elevators in Argentina has been presented to the Argentine government by a Buenos Aires firm, the Department of Commerce is informed in a report from Charles H. Ducote, assistant trade commissioner in Buenos Aires. The total cost of the construction would be more than $50,000,000. According to press notices, the financing of the project would be undertaken by the firm Baring Brothers, of London.

U. S. Would Restrain Sale of Rail Stock

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—The government began injunction proceedings in Federal District Court yesterday to restrain the Chicago, North Shore and Milwaukee Railroad from issuing further securities without authority from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Assistant United States District Attorney Joseph A. Struett, in applying for the writ, said the company had issued certificates amounting to $42,000,000 since June 7, 1923, without permission from the I. C. C.

General Bronze Co. Gets Big Contract

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—General Bronze Corporation has been awarded the contract to furnish the Swedish wrought iron work for the new 27-story Brooklyn building of the New York Telephone Company, one of the largest contracts for this type of metal work ever placed in this country.

The contract calls for lobby and elevator entrances, grills, railings and decorative fittings. The work will be done in the company's Minneapolis plant, where much of its iron work is produced.

Lake Erie Coal Loadings Lower

CLEVELAND, Oct. 4.—Bituminous coal loaded into vessels at Lake Erie ports during the week ended September 29 totaled 1,031,833 tons, against 1,127,893 tons in the corresponding week of 1929. For season to September 29, loadings totaled 29,465,182 tons, against 29,617,307.

Builders Prepare Manual of Bidding

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 4.—With a view to establishing more equitable and satisfactory procedure in the award of construction contracts, the Associated General Contractors of America at the request of several federal agencies are preparing a manual of standard bidding and awarding practices for their guidance in calling for and evaluating bids and in making construction awards, Edward J. Harding, assistant general manager of the association, announces.

The manual is being drawn up under the supervision of H. E. Foreman, engineer of the association, and will be reported upon at the full meeting of the executive board of the association, October 6, 7 and 8, at Rye, N. Y.

Porto Rico Opens N. Y. Trade Office

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4.—The Bureau of Commerce and Industry of the government of Porto Rico has opened a New York office at 1457 Broadway under the direction of H. P. Macgowan, commercial adviser to the Governor of Porto Rico, according to information received by the Commerce Department.

DROUGHT CUTS WARD'S SALES FOR MONTH

Depressed Agricultural Holds Down Mail Order And Store Unit Volume

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—September sales of Montgomery Ward & Co. showed a smaller than usual seasonal increase over August, and in comparison with a year ago recorded the largest dollar and percentage decrease this year. The decrease brought them a little above sales in September 1928.

The decrease of 18.3 per cent from September 1929 compared with a decrease of 15.9 per cent in August and 5.7 per cent in July. With the aid of special sales drives in April and May Ward had ended the first half with a 6 per cent sales increase over 1929, which was converted into a 1.3 per cent decrease for the nine months because of the decline in sales in the third quarter. Compared with the previous month September sales this year gain only 1.7 per cent. They were but 2.5 per cent above sales in September 1928.

REFLECTS DEPRESSION

The decline in grain prices combined with the cumulative effect of drought conditions apparently held down Ward's mail order business during September while unseasonably warm weather in parts of the country during the month had its effect on sales at retail. In addition the previously prevailing factors of lower catalog and store prices, unemployment and depressed business conditions continued to affect sales last month.

POSTAGE FACTOR

In July and August sales compared with a period of abnormally large sales last year because of the inauguration of the postage and freight prepayment plan early in July. In September and subsequent 1929 months this factor became of waning importance as Sears added freight to postage prepayment in its fall and winter catalog.

As Sears regained some of the mail order business which had gone to Ward in July and August and the effects of the business depression began to be felt, Ward's percentage of increase over 1928 fell from 46.7 per cent in August and 25.5 per cent in September to 12 per cent in December 1929.

GOV. ROOSEVELT HITS TUTTLE

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—(AP)—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt's campaign for re-election was in full swing today after an acceptance speech in which he accused his Republican opponent, Charles H. Tuttle, of hypocrisy on the prohibition question.

Devoting a large part of his speech at the formal notification ceremonies at the National Democratic Club last night to Tuttle's position on the liquor question, Roosevelt accused his opponent of being "wet to the wets and dry to the drys." He said:

"Three days ago I asked my opponent whether or not he would sign a state enforcement act, a question based on a widespread belief that some agreement of this kind was made to secure the support of Assemblyman Jenks and other dry leaders who have fought for this measure for years.

"The answer was not forthcoming until my friend had hastened over to Philadelphia and consulted with the President himself. His answer bears the earmarks of the President's policy of being wet and dry at the same time. It is characteristic of the way the question was dodged in the national campaign by calling the Eighteenth amendment a noble experiment."

Woman Charges Boy With Theft of Ducks

Mike Gally, 16, of 731 Lockhart street, says he did not steal six ducks from Mrs. Minnie Dieh of 1138 Buente street, North Side.

Mike was arrested by Patrolmen John Lorish and Harry Buch after Mrs. Dieh complained she had been missing ducks from her yard for several days. She told officers she caught Gally in the duck promenade and that a passerby held him until police came.

The youth said it was his first visit to the Buente street address and that he merely was talking to a man in the yard there. A smaller boy, who also was in the duck yard, escaped.

Phone Girl Heroine Of $20,000 Blaze

WAYNESBURG, Pa., Oct. 4.—Miss Minnie Hostuller, Deep Valley telephone operator, proved herself a heroine last night when she worked in a blazing building for more than one hour to summon aid to fight a $20,000 fire which for a time threatened the village of only 60 inhabitants.

Four frame buildings were destroyed in the fire, which was caused by a gasoline explosion. J. O. Smith, an owner of the buildings, was seriously burned. The village is located in one of the most sequestered spots in Greene County.

Traces Depression

HOOVER TRACES CAUSES OF SETBACK

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 4.—President Hoover, by implication at least, places responsibility for the business depression at the doorstep of the Coolidge administration.

In his address before the American Bankers' Association, in which the Chief Executive, in spite of the prevailing blueness, reaffirmed his faith that human ingenuity can prevent a recurrence of crises and depressions, traced the cause of the present setback to the excessive optimism and credit inflation that preceded the panic.

Mr. Rukeyser

Apparently, Mr. Hoover had in mind the excessive artificial easing policy to which the Federal Reserve resorted in the summer of 1927, when it wanted to stimulate the export demand for American agricultural staples. The Federal Reserve then unleashed a quantity of credit, which it later could not control and which ultimately gravitated into the stock market.

UNFAIR BLAME

This writer has consistently maintained that the causes for depression lie deep in human nature and go back to the excesses of the previous prosperity. He has pointed out that it is unfair to blame the President for prevailing economic troubles. On the other hand, it was equally unjust for Mr. Hoover and his associates in the campaign of 1928 to take credit for the Republican party for prosperity.

Some years ago Col. Leonard P. Ayres, of the Cleveland Trust Company, published data purporting to show that over a long period of years the country experienced prosperity and depression almost equally under both major political parties.

In dealing with the larger question of how to stabilize business and iron out the cycles, Mr. Hoover said:

"Apart from recovery from the present depression, the most urgent undertaking in our economic life is to devise further methods of preventing these storms. We must assure a higher degree of business stability for the future.

". . . We would need have less concern about what to do in bad times if we discovered and erected in good times further safeguards against the excesses which lead to these depressions."

BOOMS CAUSE

Mr. Hoover revealed specifically what was in his mind by saying:

"Whatever the remote causes may be, a large and immediate cause of most hard times is inflationary booms."

Immediately after the panic 11 months ago, Mr. Hoover summoned to the White House the great captains of industry and labor leaders and laid out a program designed to mitigate the depression. But what could be done then was definitely limited. The stabilizing program should have started much earlier, and should have been designed to check excesses in the earlier boom.

Hoover's November conferences were associated with the type of stabilizing program suggested by Catchings and Foster, heterodox economists, in their book, "The Road to Plenty."

At the time, however, Waddill Catchings pointed out to me that the movement was started too late in the cycle to be of maximum use. Mr. Catchings and his collaborators had been preaching the doctrine of preventive medicine in business, whereas President Hoover in the emergency called out the fire bucket brigade.

CONTROL POSSIBLE

In his latest utterance, Mr. Hoover goes over closer to the Catchings-Foster view. In this connection, the Chief Executive—the engineer and economist of the White House—said:

"Science girds itself with painstaking research to find the nature and origin of disease and to devise methods for its prevention. That should be our attitude toward these economic pestilences. They are not dispensations of providence. I am confident in the faith that their control, so far as the causes lie within our own boundaries, is within the genius of modern business."

Mr. Hoover gave the first public appraisal of the value of the White House economic conferences last November, which resulted in the formation of the national industrial survey, headed by Julius H. Barnes. Mr. Hoover indicated that more amplified plans, which placed emphasis on prevention, were needed for the future. As for constructive results, the President asserted:

"Our leading business concerns have sustained wages, have distributed employment, have expedited heavy construction. The government has expanded public works, assisted in credit to agriculture, and has restricted immigration."

In reaffirming his faith in the human possibility of smoothing out the business curve, Mr. Hoover returns to ideas which he first espoused before the President's committee on unemployment in 1921, when he was secretary of commerce, and which were again formulated last year by the President's committee on recent economic changes, which worked in conjunction with the National Bureau of Economic Research.

PROBLEM BIG ONE

Insisting that the problem was greater than mere relief in the present depression, Mr. Hoover said:

"The problem today is to complete the restoration of order in our ranks and to intensify our efforts to prevent such interruptions for the future."

Nineteen-thirty has been a bear year for economic forecasters. Numerous predictions about business recovery failed of fulfillment. Like the rest, President Hoover blundered. In March he prophesied that business and employment would be distinctly better in 60 days. The heralded spring improvement developed, but it proved only seasonal in character and by mid-summer business had sunk lower than it had been at any time since it touched the peak in June, 1929. In his latest utterance, the President abstained from a definitely timed prediction about recovery, confining himself to the general position that the set-back was only a temporary interruption of prosperity and that the readjustment was already far along on its course.

Pointing out that the depression was world wide, Mr. Hoover reminded his countrymen that under similar condition in 1922 America led the rest of the world in business recovery.

STEEL DEMAND SHOWS NO GAIN

Expected Seasonal Gain Disappointing; Price Situation Favorable

By B. E. V. LUTY

The sum total of demand for steel does not seem to have increased in the past week and there may have been a slight decrease. There is perhaps ground for some disappointment since a regular seasonal movement was expected and the increase in demand around the middle of September appeared to represent the beginning of such a movement, which by precedent when once started would extend well into or through October.

The steel price situation, on the other hand, presents a very favorable aspect and this is much more important news than any that could come out as to steel demand, for demand is evanescent, whereas prices have a fundamental bearing upon earnings in future.

MARKET STABILIZED

There is excellent authority to the effect that the market in the heavy rolled steel products, bars, shapes and plates, has recently become stabilized. In the old days, when finished steel prices used to move up and down practically in concert, these three products were always the market leaders, while they represent more than one-third of the total steel output in an ordinary year. The stabilization is at 1.65c for bars and 1.60c to 1.65c, depending on tonnage, for shapes and plates.

These prices have been the openly quoted market for quite a while, but they were being shaded somewhat in bars and occasionally quite deeply in the case of plates and shapes. For months mills did not seem to have much courage or desire to oppose price declines, but early last month a different feeling developed, due to the prospect that eventually prices would become quite unprofitable, and the more easily because with light production costs are higher. It was necessary for stabilization to be reached before October 1, because some contract business for the quarter is done, and with that written up at full prices the whole subject is largely settled.

SHEET PRICES HELD

There was a similar effort in the sheet market, while, while not entirely successful, represents much progress. Sellers appear to be holding prices quite well at present, but some mills at least have old obligations to complete, at lower prices than now ruling.

Early last month nails were formally reduced to $2 per keg, base, to the large distributors, and it is now understood that the large producers have all made up their minds that they will not go farther. If small producers cut the price they will simply increase their losses and they will be allowed to do so unmolested. An advance in nails before the end of the year is far from improbable. All these items represent progress in stabilization of the steel market as a whole.

Averaging all finished steel products outside of standard rails, the top level of last year was only a mere trifle above the average of the two preceding years and was well under prices, 1923 to 1926 inclusive. The decline from the top of last year averages about $7 per net town.

Price of Copper Metal Is Attracting Heavy Buying.

When a commodity gets down levels where it is attractive to the user, demand is not long in beginning to make itself felt. The copper industry, in all probability, is not going to stage anything in the way of spectacular recovery. But indications are that the price of the metal, now the lowest in 34 years, is beginning to attract considerable buying of substantial character. At any rate authorities in the trade report that sales since Monday morning, when the last cut in prices was announced, both to large domestic consumers and for export also, have been the heaviest since last July.

The Stock Exchange loan report showing a drop of $117,180,000 in member borrowings as of the end of September did not come fully up to what the street had expected. In view of the severity of the decline during the greater part of the month, a somewhat more substantial contraction in the total of "street" loans had been anticipated. Among those who have leaned to the belief that there has been a good deal of selling out of "strong boxes" on the last decline, the Stock Exchange figures were generally accepted as tending to support that theory.

There are 2,974,645 shares of Humble Oil outstanding, close to 70 per cent of which is owned by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. On the Curb Market recently the stock sold at $75.75 a share, giving the outstanding capitalization a market value of more than $225,000,000. Last year, Humble Oil earned $10.93 a share, so that at its recent low point the common stock sold at the equivalent of about seven times earnings a share, a very favorable ratio for a Standard Oil security. It is understood that earnings so far this year compare favorably with 1929.

The head of one brokerage house says his firm has been buying stocks for customers either with credit balances or sufficient margins to warrant taking on additional stocks. On the other hand, he said, there has been considerable selling by customers with normal margins or small margins who feared they might run into another decline, such as occurred last November. He added that there was more "actual" buying than selling, but that selling exceeded buying, because many customers were operating on the short side.

The general belief in quarters close to the company is that earnings of National Dairy Products this year will be satisfactory, with prospects for a fair increase in profits over 1929. For the first six months, the company reported surplus equal to $2.16 a share on the common stock, compared with $1.85 a share on a smaller amount of stock outstanding in the corresponding period of 1929. The hot weather during the summer months and the heat wave in September resulted in increased sales, which should be reflected in the next report on earnings.

Commission houses with extensive wire connections report a preponderance of odd-lot buying orders has come in the market in the last few sessions. They say that up to about a week ago some liquidation came from small holders. Some of the offerings were stocks taken from strong boxes. The recent buying they say, has resulted from standard stocks reaching levels which gave them more attractive yields.

Record California Citrus Crop Seen

REDLANDS, Cal., Oct. 4.—The citrus year closing November 1 will be a record one, bringing to California growers $131,000,000, it was estimated today by J. A. Steward, general sales manager of Mutual Orange Distributors.

Indicated receipts this year are 59,000 carloads of citrus fruits, of which 46,000 are oranges and grapefruit, and 13,000 are lemons. Shipments this season compare closely with the 1927-28 period, when 59,390 carloads were moved. But the income to growers for the 1929-30 season will be $4,000,000 greater than that of the 1927-28 year.

Switchboard Firm Files Patent Suits

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 4.—The Kellogg Switchboard and Supply Company, of Chicago, filed two suits in Federal Court against the New York Telephone Company and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, asking for temporary injunctions restraining the defendant companies from manufacturing certain telephone apparatus.

The complaints charged infringement of patents alleged to be held by the Kellogg company. The suits also asked for appointment of a special master to take evidence and for triple damage "by reason of the wanton character of the infringements."

Find Unknown Man Hanging to Tree

STEUBENVILLE, O., Oct. 4.—Coroner A. L. Bell is investigating the death of an unknown man found hanging from a tree in a ravine in the north end of the city. The only clue to his identity was a lottery ticket bearing the name of "Mike," found in one of his pockets.

FORD OFFICERS SEE REVIVAL

DETROIT, Oct. 4.—(AP.)—Officials of the Ford Motor Company profess to see indications of an increase in business during the final quarter of 1930.

Sales of cars and trucks during September were slightly in excess of 90,000. Production, exclusive of the Canadian branch, during the current week was 22,000 units, about 50 per cent of the weekly production at this time last year.

The employment roster at the Ford company's main plant at River Rouge totals 80,000, but most departments are on a three-day week basis.

Officials of the company said that, while figures on production and sales compare unfavorably with those of last year, sales in September exceeded expectations. One official said:

"Reports from dealers indicate that sales will climb higher as the season advances."

Volume of Freight Traffic Decreases

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—The volume of freight handled by American Railways this year was almost identical with the volume handled in 1920, the Railway Age reported.

The publication pointed out that railroads had an average daily car shortage of 81,592 cars 10 years ago, while with the same amount of freight there has been an average daily car surplus of about 450,000 in 1930.

This is the first year in the entire history of the railroads of the United States when their freight business has been as small as it was 10 years before, according to the publication.

Grinding of Cuban Sugar Curtailed

HAVANA, Oct. 4.—While it is impossible to determine at this time how many Cuban centrals will participate in grinding the crop this year, in view of present low prices, sugar interests estimate that more than 50 mills will not grind. Many mills have not placed orders for bags while others are purchasing bags to cover obligations.

WORLD SERIES RECORDS STAGGERING

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—The remarkable growth of World Series interest and patronage is attested by the staggering figures that stand out in a summing up of the title operations since the Pirates and Red Sox introduced the modern post-season competition in 1903. When Commissioner K. M. Landis makes public his official business report for the complete series of 1930, after the Athletics and Cardinals have settled their debate on the field, it will be found that for the entire 27-year period of World Championship battling, the gate receipts have been approximately $14,000,000 and that the games have been witnessed by almost 5,000,000 fans.

K. M. Landis

The 26 series between the National and American Leagues, prior to the 1930 event, drew a grand total of $13,251,877, or an average of more than $500,000 to a series, while the total attendance was 4,650,061, or an average of more than 175,000 persons present at each annual set of games. The top series financially was that of 1926 between the Yankees and Cardinals, when seven games were played to a total gate of $1,207,864. The largest receipts for a single game were $224,130, at the opening contest between the same clubs at the Yankee Stadium in New York on October 4, 1928.

THE LOWEST MARKS, naturally, were those of 1903, when Barney Dreyfuss and Henry J. Killilea, heading the Pirates and Red Sox, arranged the first of the modern series independently of their leagues and staged it without any of the present-day ballyhoo to help the gate. The eight games played attracted about 75,000 fans and brought in $61,564. The second lowest was the sensational five-game shutout series between the Giants and A's in 1905, which drew $68,435. One of the games drew only $8,348.

One respect in which the original series between the Bucs and Red Sox stands out, is that it is the only event of the kind on record in which the players on the losing club took down a larger sum of money than the athletes on the winning side. The string of eight games yielded $34,170 for the club owners and $27,394 for the players. This meant $20,545 for the winning pastimers and only $6,848 for the losers, under the 75 and 25 per cent arrangement made for that year, yet the Pirates divided a larger sum among themselves than did the victorious Red Sox, the explanation being that President Dreyfuss turned his entire share of $17,085 over to his players as a gift.

IF WALLY SCHANG, 40-year-old catcher of the A's, breaks into the present title argument in any capacity, he will hang up a new record for World Series participation from a time angle. He will have taken part in two World Series separated by a wider span of years than any pair of derby events in which any other player ever took part.

Schang will not become the record holder for number of series played, as that distinction belongs to Babe Ruth. The Bambino has taken part in nine classics, whereas this will make only seven for Schang.

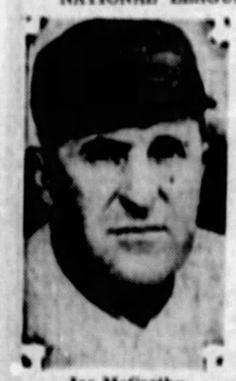
Wally Schang

BUT WALLY, IF he plays this fall, will have reappeared a greater number of years after his first experience in the big stakes than any other baller in the books. Babe Adams, former Pirate pitcher, holds the record at present. Adams pitched for the Rovers against the Tigers in 1909, and came back for a brief spell against the Senators in one of the series games of 1925. That was a gap of 16 years, and the fans did not expect soon to see another instance of a player lasting so long and being still good enough to get a World Series assignment.

HOWEVER, SCHANG will beat Adams' record by one year if he manages to get into the present series, as his first appearance in the blue ribbon dates back 17 seasons to 1913, when he caught for the A's against the Giants. The only players besides Adams to approach the record that Schang has a chance to make were Rabbit Maranville and Babe Ruth.

Maranville played in two series 14 years apart, 1914 and 1928, while 12 seasons, 1915 to 1928, separated the first and latest appearance of Rut's in the derby. Schang has played in the series for more clubs than any other performer. He caught for the A's in 1913 and 1914, for the Red Sox in 1918, and for the Yankees in 1921, 1922 and 1923.

NATIONAL LEAGUE ADHERENTS continue to criticize the action of the Chicago club in dropping Joe McCarthy and opening the way for him to go to the American League as a blunder harmful not only to the Cubs, but to the entire Heydler circuit.



Joe McCarthy

The National is not overstocked with smart managers, and can ill afford to weaken itself and help the younger loop by letting another ace get away. It is a repetition of the case of Miller Huggins, who, when given his freedom by the Cardinals, went over to the rival league and won six pennants for the Yankees.

IT WAS NOT to any lack of effort or to any unwillingness to offer liberal terms that the Boston Red Sox did not land McCarthy before he conferred with Col. Jacob Ruppert, the Yankee owner. It develops that President Bob Quinn, of the Red Sox tendered McCarthy a blank contract and invited him to fill in his own term of years.

"Go first and see what the Yankees, Pirates or Robins will give you," said Quinn.. "Then come back to us and we'll give you more. If we haven't got as much as you want, we'll borrow it."

ON TOP OF THAT Quinn offered to give McCarthy a slice of Red Sox stock, and pointed out to him that he would not be expected to produce an immediate pennant-winner or near winner in Boston as in New York, but merely a fifth or sixth-place aggregation.

McCarthy said he would be forced to decline, however. It wasn't a question of money, he remarked, admitting that the Boston offer could not be bettered, but said his dismissal by the Chicago club had carried with it a charge that he could not win with a good club and he wanted to prove that he could. He would have no chance to prove it with a weak club in Boston, he said.

SPEAKING OF BOSTON, baseball men from that city who are

Mrs. J. M. Irwin, of Pittsburgh, and Mrs. W. H. Christie, of Butler, deadlocked for third place with net 167s.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Oct. 4.—Morgantown today is a town gone mad. It's not the heat, nor is it the humidity. It's football. Everyone is a bit balmy here. The hotels are jammed; you have to be a Houdini to get anything to eat, and if you step up to a cigar counter for a smoke and pull out a bill, some nut runs up to you and shouts:

"Ten to eight on Pitt. What say, buddie, what say?"

The occasion for this sudden departure from sanity and calm and peaceful existence is the annual Pitt-West Virginia football game today, which for the first time since 1917 is being played here. Thirteen years ago Pitt used this town a visit and, after the hardest kind of a battle, eked out a 14-to-9 victory. Today's game, between two highly keyed and dangerously formidable elevens, figures to be another knock-down-and-drag-out session.

The Panther varsity squad, after spending a more or less quiet night in Uniontown, moved into the town this morning. About the same time, the main body of Pittsburgh fans and the University band puts in an appearance. Pittsburghers have been streaming into Morgantown since early last evening, and will continue to tumble into town, by private car, train, bus and even on foot. Mountaineer Field, West Virginia's own Stadium, is going to be jammed to the proverbial guards.

BOTH TEAMS UNBEATEN

With both elevens undefeated, the Panthers in one and West Virginia in two games, the contest takes on added color and importance. Last year, Pitt's powerful team, which eventually won the Eastern championship, ran over West Virginia to the tune of 27 to 7 in Pittsburgh. The year before, Ira Rodgers, head coach here, obtained his first decision over Jock Sutherland in five starts when the Mountaineers won, 9 to 6.

Duquesne and West Virginia Wesleyan both have fallen before the power of the Mountaineer attack so far; toppled before an attack which has as one of its most important weapons a well laid and classily executed aerial game. The Mountaineers downed the Dukes after a stubborn battle in Pittsburgh two weeks ago, 7 to 0, and trampled on the Bobcats last week, 26 to 0.

The Panthers took over Waynesburg with comparative ease in their inaugural battle last week in Pittsburgh, 52 to 0. Pitt did not impress its powers or capabilities on anyone in that game to any great degree, except that it showed unsuspected reserve attacking strength.

LINEUPS UNKNOWN

Definite lineups will not be available until the teams take the field, but the two coaches, Sutherland and Rodgers, have dropped enough hints to enable even bum guessers like myself to put together starting elevens that won't come so far from being o. k.

Unless Sutherland decides to keep Josh Williams on the bench (as he did in practice all week) and to use Eddie Hirschberg at end in place of Rip Collins, the Panthers will hear the opening gun in much the same manner that they started against Waynesburg. Jim MacMurdo, Quatse and Hart Morris will make up one side of the line. Daugherty will go at center, Ernie Lewis at right guard and Charley Tully at right tackle. Hirschberg or Collins will be at the other end.

Gene Joseph and Sortet, who've been showing exceptional class as wingmen, are slated to be in there at the terminals on the Mountaineer line. Lough and Ferrara, or Lough and Beall, will be at the tackles. Capt. Red Gordon and Brown appear certain to start at the guards and the veteran Carl White or Plaster over the ball at center.

In the backfield, the most likely combination appears to be Sebulsky at quarter; Bartrug, the kicking star, and Doyle at the halves, and either Dodson or Francis (Tarzan) Glenn at fullback.

Because the boys with the do-re-mi figure Pitt to be another pretty good ball club, and because West Virginia didn't look like a world beater against the Dukes, and because the Mountaineer line does not seem to be clicking, Pitt rules a favorite by 10 to 8 and better to win. The dope is that both ball clubs will score, with the Panthers scoring more often than West Virginia.

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOON OF YESTERDAY: THE HOTTEST SPRING IN THE WORLD IS IN ICELAND—The hottest spring in the world is the Grand Geyser, in the valley of Hvita, Iceland. At regular intervals this "hot water volcano" erupts, when a gigantic column of water rushes up to a height of more than 200 feet, impelled by vapors that have a temperature of 50 degrees above the boiling point. OUR SPEED POSSIBILITIES AS COMPARED WITH THE ANT—In agility and muscular strength, insects are relatively much better equipped than human beings. My statement about the ant is based on observation by the entomologist Bethe, who places the ant even ahead of the bee in intelligence and muscular perfection. If we moved our legs as quickly as the ant, we should walk at the rate of 800 miles per hour.

cious as to Gabby Street's pitcher. When the club left Philadelphia, it was given out with much authority that Bill Hallahan would harass the American Leaguers with his southpaw slants. Now comes an eleventh hour report to the effect that Jess Haines may grace the mound in the third game.

The newspapermen of Philadelphia are just as bad. They're as gummed up on Mack's pitchers as are any of the scribes, or else these journalists are a part of the nefarious plot to keep up the suspense.

"Mack has won nearly every honor there is in baseball except the feat of copping four World Series in a row," quoted a writer of the Quaker City, as he dwelt on the situation. "Connie," the scribe continued, "would be acting natural if he tried to make it four in a row. You know he lost four in a row once. All things considered, I would not be surprised if he were to hold Grove and Earnshaw ready for the two games here in the hope that he could make a clean sweep.

"On the other hand, Bill Shores thinks he is going to pitch today, but he has nothing official in the big matter. Rube Walberg is almost begging to get in there."

WILSON TO PLAY

There is one development today that appears to bespeak comfort to the Redbirds. Catcher Jimmy Wilson has so far recovered from his injured ankle that he will be behind the bat of receive Hallahan or Haines. Wilson appears to be just about ready, and he will force the issue in view of the serious situation. The news caused a rise in the confidence of the St. Louis players.

The Redbirds, as a whole, were in a significant mood when they reached the home port yesterday. They were sore. The two defeats left a sting that did not let up much in the long train ride. It appears altogether likely they will go after the Athletics with added zest in the third fight.

Patrons of the National League, however, are not doing much shouting. With 14 setbacks in 15 games in four successive Octobers, the sympathisers of the senior circuit can see nothing to cheer about. What they need is a couple victories. Then they would go hook, line and sinker on enthusiasm.

Interest in St. Louis is high, and a triumph by the Cardinals today would set off the home supporters in an orgy of shouting. The Mackian threat is strong enough to keep the fans in an apprehensive frame of mind.

Carnegie Tech's 1930 varsity eleven will make its bow before a local gathering this afternoon as the Tartans take on the formidable Thiel College team in the Stadium.

The Tartans, with fine prospects and having started off on the right foot by crushing Buffalo University under a 75-to-2 score last week, meet more serious opposition in the Lutheran eleven here today. Thiel battled Temple, one of the ranking elevens of the East, last week in Philadelphia, holding the Temple team to a 13-7 score. Heavy on the line and with a pair of star backs in Myers and Wardle, the Lutherans are accounted to be a real test for Bob Waddell's aspiring Skibos.

Tech will present a slightly changed front against Thiel from the one that squared off against Buffalo. Tank Highberger, veteran tackle, will be out of action, stricken with appendicitis. His place at left tackle will be taken by Don Fletcher, shifted over from right tackle, and Fletcher's place will be filled by Len Schnupp.

Series May Be Embalmed In St. Louis—Altrock

By NICK ALTROCK,
Famous Baseball Humorist.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—Well, folks, we are on the eve of reviving the World Series again, provided the Cards can be revived. The next three games are scheduled for St. Louis and I would not be surprised if the series was embalmed right here.

The only hope Gabby Street has got is for Hallahan to hold the enemy today and then for Burleigh Grimes to come back tomorrow and spit ball the A's till they drown. In other words, the Cards need their aces back to back. This is a rare play in baseball or stud poker, but still it can be done.

Nick Altrock

Both teams have had a full day's rest, which is more than your Uncle Nick can say. In fact, my admirers almost lost the services of their favorite crystal gazer in Indiana this morning and I'll tell you how.

I left Philadelphia Thursday night on a fast through train for St. Louis. Well, early this morning while we were whistling through Indiana, the pangs of hunger seized us, so when we stopped at the Terre Haute depot, I got off for some orange juice and cracked ice. One of the other experts on board had a little gin, so we decided to get together for breakfast.

REAL CALAMITY

Well, I secured the orange juice and cracked ice at the Terre Haute station, but while I was dickering for a silver container to shake up our breakfast in, the train started to pull out. And if you think Frankie Frisch is good at stealing bases, you should have seen your Uncle Nicholas streak down the platform and hail the end of the observation car with a hook slide.

It would have been a calamity to baseball if I had been left behind. Of course, there are lots worse places to be left behind than Terre Haute, but right at the present moment I can't think of what their names are.

That long train jump from Philadelphia to St. Louis by the way, has an important bearing on the championship. You see, St. Louis is 22 hours from Philadelphia unless you get off at Terre Haute for orange juice and cracked ice. In that case, it is liable to be 36 hours.

PLENTY OF POKER

But first of all, the railroad trip makes a short series seem long. Then again, the journey has a soothing effect on the sporting writers. The 22-hour jump on the train gives the experts a nice chance to rest and 22 hours of poker.

I see where Connie Mack said President Hoover was a good mascot for the A's because they never lose while he is looking on. Well, Connie has a good chance now to return the favor to Mr. Hoover. It seems that when the President speaks in Boston next Monday afternoon he can't get his speech on the air, because Graham McNamee will be broadcasting the World Series.

But if Connie wants to do something big for his country, he can clean up the series in four straight games on the Sabbath and give Hoover a whack at the microphone Monday afternoon, after all.

Of course, this is only a suggestion and I haven't got Gabby Street's opinion on the matter yet. Gabby will probably hold out for a seven-game series, even if it keeps Amos and Andy silent till the end of next week.

RACE MEET OPENS

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 4.—(AP.)—The fall turf meet opened at Churchill Downs here today for 11 days of racing.

DUKES ERRATIC; WIN, 38-0

By HARRY KECK,
Sports Editor.

Two Duquesne University elevens that alternated in playing streaky football last night combined to score six touchdowns on the fighting Detroit Tech eleven before a crowd of 8,000 at Forbes Field and win by a score of 38 to 0, only the first two of the touchdown goals being kicked, by Sullivan and Kovalcheck. O'Toole missed the third and Kovalcheck the final three, the last one of which was blocked on a bad pass from the center.

Until the closing minutes, when it went to pieces and permitted three tallies in rapid succession, the Detroit team acquitted itself creditably on the defensive, nipping a number of Duquesne sorties into the scoring zone, and, if the Dukes had not clicked as they did in that final quarter, their exhibition would have to be set down as mighty disappointing. Coach Elmer Layden may well stress this fact in prepping his charges for their battle with Loyola University at Chicago next Friday night.

VISITORS LACK PUNCH

The Detroit team had nothing in the way of an attack, but it boasted a stout defensive line and a good kicker in Fullback Hunt, who time after time early in the fracas sent the ball spinning away for good gains and made the Dukes fight their way back up the field. As a result, the locals staggered around getting nowhere in particular, until all of a sudden in that final period things began to break for them and they rattled off as many touchdowns in a few minutes as they had been able to corral in the entire game up to that time. In fact, just before the final whistle the tired Detroiters were becoming demoralized to the point where the contest was verging on a rout.

Two of the Dukes' touchdowns, the third, in the third period, and the fourth, in the final frame, were the result of forward passes, the first from Halfback Trambley to Sepsi, the other halfback, going for 31 yards, and the other, from Cristina to Pratt over the

SCHOOL TEAMS SEE ACTION

The scholastic grid season got well under way yesterday, with City League and W. P. I. A. L. contests predominating.

In one of the finest games of the day, Carrick and Oliver battled to a scoreless tie. South nosed out Peabody, 7-6; Braddock set down Rankin, 7-6; Westinghouse swamped Fifth Avenue, 66-0; Allderdice and South Hills played a 0-0 tie; Scott, of North Braddock, beat East Pittsburgh, 56-0; and Etna tripped Ben Avon, 7-0, in other contests.

Shady Side Academy copped from Perry High, 24-7; Stowe blanked Crafton, 13-0; Duquesne stopped South Brownsville, 12-0; Clairton whitewashed Homestead, 20-0, and McKees Rocks walloped Imperial, 55-0. Avalon bowed to Coraopolis, 31-0, while Arnold Prep bowed to Edgewood, 40-0.

Mt. Lebanon took over Bridgeville, 7-0; Har-Brack topped North Union, 47-0; New Castle won over Aliquippa, 13-2; Charleroi bumped Central Catholic of Pittsburgh, 27-6; Monessen and Canonsburg played to a scoreless deadlock, and Washington tripped Monongahela, 45-0.

BOXER EXONERATED

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Oct. 4.—(AP.)—Kid Leonard, East Moline, Ill., boxer, was exonerated yesterday in the death of Hiram Roth (Battling) Nelson, who stopped a blow in a match which Leonard won Thursday night. Nelson's collapse was attributed by the jury to paralysis of the cardiac muscles as a result of strenuous exercise.

BARTLETT VICTOR

SPRINGFIELD, O., Oct. 4.—(AP.)—Ollie Bartlett, Toledo bantamweight, won a 10-round decision over Irish Mickey Conn, Rokomo, Ind., here last night.

STREET SAYS HALLAHAN WILL TURN TIDE

BILL HAS YET TO FAIL IN 'PINCH'

By GABBY STREET.
Manager, St. Louis Cardinals.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—We have lost twice in succession to several good clubs during the National League pennant race and we never quit and we're far from a beaten ball club, despite the fact that the Athletics have taken our measure twice, we can come back, and we're going to come back. We expect to have the upper hand when we move back to Philadelphia to complete the World Series schedule.

Bill Hallahan is going to pitch for us and Bill will come through for us just as he has many times this year. I distinctly remember three games of great importance that Hallahan pitched for us this year. We had lost two games of an important series and I said to Hallahan:

"Bill, this is how much confidence I've got in you. We have to stop this ball club to prevent them from taking the series, and I'm sending you in there because I know you can do it."

BILL HAS YET TO FAIL

Bill stopped the Cubs in such a series and he stopped the Robins.

Then the baseball world still remembers the great game Bill pitched against the Robins in the last series at Brooklyn. The Robins had won 11 straight games. They hadn't lost a game at home since August 4 and they were leading the league. If they could have beaten us they would have won the pennant. They knew that and I knew that we had to beat Brooklyn, and I told Bill again that we were up against it. All our great drive wouldn't do us any good unless we could beat the Robins, and I told him I had so much confidence in him that I was sending him against Vance in the first game and I knew he could beat the Dazzler.

Hallahan came through, we cleaned up the series and here we are with another important game to be won. And once again I am depending on Hallahan.

Our backs are to the wall, as they say, and Bill is going to have to stop the Athletics and put us back in the fight for the world championship, and I know he can do it.

EXPECTS MORE HITTING

We haven't hit at all in the series and without detracting from the work of Mack's pitchers, Grove and Earnshaw, it isn't in the books for our good hitters to continue in their slump. Douthit hasn't made a hit; Bottomley, a great hitter, hasn't got any safe, and Hafey has only made one, and that one broke through Boley at short.

You can't keep Hafey and Bottomley from hitting day after day and they're coming out of it. And they are long hitters. A few hits from them and the series standing would be different.

Things will be different at home. The Athletics made three home runs at their ball park, but those hits would have been singles at Sportsman's Park, whereas Watkins' four bagger would have been good for four in almost any park. I'm using Jimmy Wilson behind the plate today. Not that Mancuso hasn't done good work. He has performed in great style, but we've lost two games and a change may help.

(Copyright, 1930, Christy Walsh Syndicate)

MADGE TO BOX BELMONT

A double windup will feature next week's show at the Moose Temple. It will consist of two 10-round bouts, with Jimmy Belmont, of Braddock, meeting Larry Madge, of Cleveland, in the main event and Jimmy Reed, of Erie, opposing Johnny Smackey, of Canonsburg, in the other top event.

Cowboy De Luca, of Lawrenceville, boxes Jimmy McGraw, of Wheeling, in a 10-round main bout at Weirton, W. Va., on October 15. Frankie Lands will meet Young Morris in one of the six-round supporting bouts.

They are arguing for a return to no-decision bouts in Pennsylvania as a result of the decision in favor of Lew Massey over Eddie Shea in their return bout in Philadelphia last Monday night.

JOE DUNDEE STOPPED

A PRATT SPECIALTY—FORWARD PASS FOR TALLY

Count a Duquesne University football game lost when Sammy Pratt, the end, does not catch a forward pass for a touchdown. He did that little thing in the fourth period, as shown above, to break down the grim defense of Detroit Tech and pave the way for two more touchdowns in the dying minutes last night. Cristina was on the heaving end of the pass.

TECH, THIEL PLAY TODAY

veno, John Karcis and probably Goldberg will get the starting assignments. Goldberg will go at quarterback in the stead of Harry McCurdy, whom the coaches wish to keep in top form for the game next week with Georgia Tech.

The Lutherans came out of their game with Temple in good physical trim and will be able to present a strong front here today. Myers, a fine line-bucker and expert passer, is a double-threat man in the backfield. Last year, Thiel put up a great battle against the locals before succumbing by a 26-0 score. Boasting the most promising squad in years, the Rowleymen figure to do as well here today.

With many district teams playing night games, today's collegiate card as it concerns district elevens is somewhat light. Besides the Tech-Thiel game here and the Pitt-West Virginia Tidbit at Morgantown, only five other games are listed.

West Virginia Wesleyan is booked to make its annual appearance in New York, facing Chick Meehan's New York University Violets. The Edinboro State Teachers, confident after their great battle against Westminster last week, aid Allegheny in opening its 1930 campaign in Meadville.

attending the World Series report that Bill McKechnie, Wilkinsburg citizen, has made a big hit as manager of the Braves, and has the confidence and whole-hearted support of every fan in town.

The popularity of McKechnie and his managerial methods is reflected in the business report of the Braves, too. Though the club finished in eighth place in the 1930 National League race, persons close to the head of the concern say that Judge Fuchs and his associates in the ownership cleaned up a profit of $175,000 for the season.

Lefty O'Doul

THAT LEFTY O'DOUL, swatting outfielder of the Phillies, is certain to go to the Robins for next year in a trade to be put through in the near future, is a World Series rumor from apparently reliable sources. Negotiations have been under way since trading became permissible again under baseball law at the close of the regular season, and it is said that it will be only a question of a short time until the transfer of O'Doul to the Brooklyn club is officially announced. The Robins are to give up Pitchers Ray Moss and Clise Dudley and another player, according to report. A second story has the Robins also trying to get Second Baseman Fresco Thompson and the Phils unwilling to talk trade. The acquisition of O'Doul would give the Brooklyn club three left-hand hitters in its outfield, but Manager Robinson figures it would be a winning combination.

DUKES ERRATIC, BUT WIN BY 38 TO 0

goal line, starting from the 10-yard line. The first two tallies of the game were hard earned and were punched over from the one-yard line by Fullback Pawlina in the first period and Quarterback Devinney in the second. On the next to last tally, Halfback Todd ran left end for 14 yards to cross the final marker, and, on the last tally, Kovalcheck went over from the one-yard line.

SCORING DELAYED

The Dukes, as usual, started their second string team and replaced it with the first string in the second period and repeated the process in the second half. The regulars had more trouble getting started than their understudies and both teams were guilty of fumbling at critical stages.

The starting lineup early lost the ball on downs on the two-yard line and had to work back half of the length of the field before Pawlina finally went over with the period two-thirds completed.

In a scoring position again early in the second quarter, the Dukes were held and lost the ball on a punt over the goal line. Detroit kicked away and the oval was in midfield when the regulars replaced Layden's shock troops. A spectacular play paved the way for the second touchdown. On final down, Devinney received a bad pass from center for a forward pass try and had to run back and retrieve the ball, which he did on his own 35-yard line. Then, almost smothered by the Detroit linemen, who had broken through, he ran back a little more and tossed a long pass down the left side of the field to Murphy, the end, who sensed the play and received the ball on the Detroit 13-yard line, turning what had been a fool into a rare stroke of good fortune. Short gains brought first down on the one-yard line and then Devinney carried the ball over.

TALLY ON PASSES

Before the half ended, the Dukes recovered a fumbled punt on the Detroit 38-yard line, but were held and had to kick. They pressed again, but failed to make the riffle, and, just as time was called, lost the ball on a pass into the end zone, and the count was only 14-0 at half-time.

Trambley's ball-carrying and passing brought the only touchdown of the third period. Finally getting to the 31-yard line for first down, he tossed a long pass over end which Sepsi dropped near the goal line. He then worked the same play and it went through. Another incompleted pass over the goal line saved Detroit as the period ended.

Shortly after the regulars returned to the lineup early in the fourth period, Todd intercepted a Detroit pass and almost had a clear field for a touchdown, but finally was dragged down on the Detroit 39-yard line. Getting to the 16-yard line for first down, the Dukes fumbled and Detroit recovered and kicked away. A forward pass, Cristina to Devinney, put the ball on the 23-yard line, but Detroit held and the Dukes punted over the goal.

ROUT NEAR END

Detroit's return kick was high and came down on its own 30-yard line, a break for the locals. Short gains brought first down on the eight-yard line, but a loss followed, and, finally, with third and 10, Cristina passed to Sammy Pratt in the end zone for the long-coming fourth touchdown.

The final two touchdowns followed in rapid order. The Dukes recovered a Detroit fumble inside the visitors' 40-yard line and Cristina passed to Kovalcheck, who ran to the 14-yard line, and, on the next play, Todd skirted left end for the score.

After the following kickoff, Devinney intercepted a forward pass on his own 45-yard line and ran along the right side of the field to the 12-yard line. Kovalcheck battered the ball over in three tries, and the game ended shortly afterward.

Doggo Burns, the Dukes' star runner, was not on hand, having gone to Beaver Falls to scout Geneva, which will be met later by the Dukes. The lineup:

DOPE FAVORS EARLY END, MACK SAYS

By CONNIE MACK
Manager World Champion Athletics

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—While the Athletics have won both games of the current World Series and placed the Cardinals at a decided disadvantage, the real test for us starts in this city this afternoon.

We are scheduled to play three games here and if we win two of them, the series will be over and that third game stub held by Philadelphia ticket purchasers will be good for redemption value only.

Should we lose two out of three games, or three straight on Missouri soil, then the series will return to Philadelphia to be finished at Shibe Park with the sixth game scheduled Wednesday, and a seventh game, if necessary, the following day.

SEES HARD FIGHT

While spinning over steel rails at the rate of 60 miles an hour yesterday, I had a chance to consult World Series records and I find there is only one instance where a team that won the first two games of the October classic eventually was beaten for the title.

That was in 1921 when the two New York clubs battled for the highest honors. The Yankees captured the first two contests and then lost, but it was only possible because the rules that year called for five out of nine games to decide. Since then the rule has been four out of seven.

These past performances are might comforting, but I am looking for the Cardinals to present a stronger front in St. Louis.

It is true the park advantage is not so great for we play 11 games each year at Sportsman's Park which is the home of the Browns, of the American League, as well as the Cardinals, and the records show that we have always thrived at this battlefield.

In the two games played so far, the point that has impressed me most is that our team has hit when hits meant runs. We make our hits when they are needed.

Our hit totals were not big on either day but our run making was heavy. Our hits counted far more than the blows unloosed by the Cardinals.

PITCHERS SHINE

This was due to the fact that both Grove and Earnshaw seemed to be stronger in keeping our opponents from hitting when it was necessary to do so to keep runs from scoring.

In two games we made 12 hits and scored 11 runs. The Cardinals made 15 hits, three more than us, but scored only three runs, eight less than we did.

These figures reflect the difference between hitting in a pinch and failing to take advantage of opportunities.

So far the lower end of the batting order has outshone the others with the bat, excepting that Frankie Frisch is playing the usual swift game he always shows in a World Series.

There are two young Pennsylvania boys in the Cardinal lineup who have done astonishingly well. I refer to Charley Gelbert, of Ambler, son of a famous Penn athlete and little Sparky Adams, of the coal regions.

Both of these infielders have accepted many difficult chances with ease and grace, cutting down our hit totals each day, while both have hit the ball hard. Mancuso, the catcher, has handled himself so well that he must be ranked with the leading catchers. As for my pitcher today, I am not going to recede from policy not to announce anything in advance. As a matter of fact, I have not the slightest idea to whom I will hand the ball today.

EARLY FINISH—RUTH

A'S MAY END SERIES IN ST. LOUIS

By BABE RUTH

Baseball's Highest Salaried Player

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—I've got a hunch that this World Series is drawing close to the finish. The Cardinals, back on their home lot and cheered on by loyal home fans, may make a fight of it yet and of course there's always the possibility that they may come back to win even after those two defeats.

Babe Ruth

But I don't think so.

As I size up the two games that have already been played it strikes me that the A's have done just about as expected. They haven't been sensational. They haven't played over their heads. They've just gone along playing the same sort of ball they played all season, no better and no worse. All season long Cochrane and Simmons and Foxx and Miller have hit in the pinches; all season long Boley and Bishop and Dykes have come through with great plays when great plays were needed. Some of the National Leaguers seem to think the boys have been playing over their heads, but they have not. I've watched them and fought them all season long and I'm telling you that A's as they appeared in the World Series, are just the same as the A's during the regular season.

CARDS IN SLUMP

The Cards on the other hand, have slumped from their season form. The Cardinals are a better ball club, a tougher ball club, a more polished club than they have shown in this series. In the two games that have been played we've seen them at their worst. Perhaps in the first game here they will find themselves and play the sort of ball they're capable of playing. Whether, playing at top speed, they are able to win back the ground they have lost remains to be seen. Personally I don't think they can. My experience with the Athletics is that they play just the sort of ball they need to play to win. If winning is easy they take things that way. If the going is tough they've got the reserve pressure to meet the opposition.

Gabby Street will start Hallahan in the opening game at St. Louis. I'm anxious to see him work. I've never seen Bill in a full game, but from the reports I get he must be one of the best lefthanders in the business. National Leaguers tell me he is faster than Grove. I can't quite believe that and won't until he shows me out there on the mound.

MAY BOTHER A'S

Ordinarily the A's are a tough club against lefthanders. But if Hallahan is as good as these fellows tell me he'll give the A's plenty of trouble, or any other club he faces. And if Hallahan can win this one the Cards will be right back in the running again, with Grimes ready for a comeback and Sylvester Johnson on deck. Personally, I was more impressed with Syl Johnson than with any Cardinal pitcher I've seen thus far. To my mind that sweeping side arm motion of his is the thing that is most likely to give the A's real and constant trouble.

I don't know who Connie will start. But I have a hunch it will be Grove. With two days rest Bob ought to be able to come right back again, and you've got to remember this: That first game he wasn't himself. He won despite bad pitching and thanks largely to fine defensive play. The Cardinals haven't yet seen the real Grove—they haven't yet had a taste of his real speed or had a look at his best curve ball. If it's Grove against Hallahan, then I figure we're due to see the classiest baseball exhibition of the entire series.

CARD SLUGGERS FAIL

The disappointment of the series thus far, to me, has been the inability of Bottomley and Hafey to do any hitting. These two boys are real sluggers and I know it. Thus far the Athletics have kept them tightly bottled up, and between them they have had only one hit. But they're apt to break loose any time, and when they do Connie's pitchers are due for plenty of trouble.

In the long run, though—well, I've said all season long that the A's were one of the best ball clubs of recent years, and I see no reason to change my opinion now.

MY 50 YEARS IN BASEBALL

By CONNIE MACK
MANAGER OF WORLD CHAMPION PHILADELPHIA ATHLETICS

INSTALLMENT NO. 24.

The coming of Waddell to the Athletics in June had an immediate effect on the team. It instantly improved all along the line and became a pennant contender.

Waddell, Plank and Husting formed a trio of steady winners that could not be denied and eventually the Athletics won the pennant, the first of eight to the credit to the club.

Connie Mack.

When it is pointed out that we had started the season with Lajoie, Flick, Bernhard, Duggleby and Fraser suddenly wrested from us by a court decision, it was nothing short of remarkable that we could find the players in their places to win the championship.

The feat of the Athletics in winning the 1902 flag, therefore, goes down in baseball history as an uncommon one.

At the end of this season, the American League owners dropped Baltimore from the circuit and substituted New York. This was the last change the American League ever found it necessary to make in its circuit.

Ever since its expansion, entrance of the American League into New York had been the dream of dreams. The American League still was at war with the National and the senior owners always reasoned that they held the whip hand as long as they could keep us out of New York, even if we did take their best players from them.

National League owners pointed out that it would be next to impossible to find a suitable site in the metropolis for another ball club.

LEAGUE INVADES NEW YORK

Nevertheless, the American League overcame all obstacles and proudly announced that it at last had extended its circuit to New York. It was the biggest coup ever scored by the junior loop and it immediately added immense prestige to the circuit. So much, in fact, that for the first time National League owners were in a mood to capitulate. John T. Brush, owner of the Giants, alone was a die-hard and refused to have anything to do with peace overtures, but his colleagues overruled him.

After several meetings between committees representing the two warring factions, peace was restored to baseball. A body was organized called the National Commission that was empowered to decide all disputes between clubs of the two leagues in claims for players.

This commission consisted of three members, the presidents of the two leagues and a third man from one of the clubs. One man who worked hard for peace in baseball was August Herrmann, the unselfish owner of the Cincinnati club. He was chosen the third member of this important body and his two colleagues elected him chairman. He held that office as long as the body existed.

BENDER JOINS ATHLETICS

So, therefore, the 1903 race started with peace in baseball, a most welcome occurrence after two stormy years. I made several changes in the Athletics team. I acquired two new pitchers in Chief Bender, a Chippewa Indian, who had gone to Carlisle, and Weldon Henley, another curver, as well as Outfielder Dan Hoffman and Oliver Pickering. I released Dave Fultz to the Highlanders, which then was the nickname of the New York club now called the Yankees.

Nearly all teams sent valuable players to the Highlanders that year so it would be a power in the circuit without delay.

The 1903 pennant race was a snappy one with the Athletics and Red Sox the contenders. We had to be content with second place.

It was the best year financially the new league ever had. With peace in baseball the new league possessed a solid footing and the addition of the New York club rounded out our circuit to perfection.

WORLD SERIES INAUGURATED

At the close of the season, the Red Sox and Pittsburgh, which won the National League pennant, played the first modern World Series.

Pittsburgh looked to be an easy winner, for it won three out of the first four games, but, to the consternation of the National League, the Red Sox won the next four games in a row and were acclaimed champions of the world.

This marked the first interleague competition since 1890 when the Brooklyn champions of the National League met the Louisville champions of the American Association.

The season of 1904 also was a notable one. The American League now was walking with rapid strides where it once merely crawled.

The Boston club again won the pennant, but the Athletics dropped to fifth place. Yet it was a close, hard race to the finish, and, while the Athletics finished fifth, they had a percentage of .536, winning 11 more games than they lost.

That season Andy Coakley joined the Athletics after he had finished his course at Holy Cross, and he gave us another dependable pitcher.

SECOND SERIES THWARTED

The Giants won the National League pennant and the Red Sox immediately challenged them to a World Series, but John T. Brush, owner of the New York club, who still was hostile to the American League, would not permit his club to accept the challenge.

There was some justice in one of Mr. Brush's explanations for declining in that there were no special rules for such a series and there was nobody who had jurisdiction to control such a set of games.

Mr. Brush pointed out that either team could withdraw from the field at any time with no one empowered to punish the offender and that spectators would have no redress if such a thing occurred.

The objections of the New York owner were to bear fruit, for in another year this matter was to be corrected and ever since then the World Series has been the chief spice of baseball.

CHESBRO'S WILD PITCH

The season of 1904 was another financial success for the American League. The race was close and the attendance was good. All the hopes held out by the founders at the start of this baseball venture had been realized.

The American League now was permanently on solid ground and getting bigger with each season. The New York club had been coming along with rapid strides and that season fought it out with the Red Sox to the final game of the season.

Victory in that game meant the pennant and the ninth inning found the score even with a Boston runner on third and one out. Jack Chesbro, the New York pitching star, tried to put everything he had on the ball to fan the next batsman, but unloosened a wild pitch instead and the winning run scored that gave Boston the game and the pennant.

Sport Vignettes

The next assignment of D. E. Benjamin, sports staff photographer, who covered the World Series games at Philadelphia and will be at the Pitt-West Virginia game at Morgantown, W. Va., today, will be to get a flashlight of that rare study, a bimbo capping one of those climaxes we read so much about . . . The Pitt-West Virginia battle should be a wow, and it's no wonder it will be a sellout . . . Here are two natural rivals of many years' standing meeting in a small stadium with the more famed of the two playing the role of invader . . . Both teams are powerful and it is anything but a cinch bet that the Panthers will feed on Mountaineer meat, although they are logical favorites.

Howard Harpster, Geneva coach, whose charges took a trimming from Bucknell last week, says he never saw such big linemen as the Bisons trotted out on the field. "Where do they get 'em?" he mused . . . The greatest quarterback Carnegie Tech ever had doesn't expect to encounter such serious competition in his remaining games . . . He looks for his team to straighten itself out and play some fine football and enjoy a really successful season.

Frank (Bull) Brown, local American Association umpire and boxing judge, does not agree with Beans Reardon, World Series arbiter, that the tough spot for an umpire is behind the plate . . . "It's out on the bases where you get into the jams," is Brown's view. "If you call a batter safe on a close play you charge up a hit against the pitcher and he yells, and if you call him out you take a hit away from the batter and he squawks . . . Both depend on their records for the payoff . . . A pitcher seldom puts up a holler when you miss one at the plate unless it's the third strike that would pull him out of a hole . . . Working behind the plate is the soft spot, if you ask me."

Quick pitches are barred in the World Series . . . How about quick thinking? . . . If, they ever remove the quick kick from football, they'll take one of the most interesting features out of that game.

Joe Dawson, former Pirate pitcher, who now is a local aviator of prominence and hasn't regretted the move that took him out of baseball, is a great admirer of Joe McCarthy as a manager and can't savvy the Cubs' action in firing him to make room for Rogers Hornsby at the helm of the club . . . Joe worked under McCarthy in Louisville and says they don't make any better managers . . . Incidentally, Dawson believes Charley Wood, the new Pirate pitching sensation, has a great future . . . The only criticism he has to offer is that Charley throws too many curve balls . . . He believes Wood is wasting a lot of energy and, with his great-breaking curve used mainly as a threat, he should get by pitching not more than 70 to 80 balls in a game . . . "I wish I had had Wood's curve when I was in there," Joe observed the other day. "I never could develop a curve, and I was under a handicap for this reason. I had to get by on my fast one and fool 'em, yet my earned run average always was small."—HARRY KECK.

KELLY, GOLD VICTORS AT MOOSE

By JAMES MILLER

Jimmy Kelly, southpaw Irishman, formerly of Dayton, O., and now of the North Side, and Billy Holt, Negro, of Canton, O., billed as semi-finalists at the Moose Temple last night, saved the weekly patrons at the downtown emporium of swat from suffering a drab evening.

It was one of those knock-'em-down and drag-'em-out affairs from the third round until the referee stopped the bout in the fourth and awarded Kelly the fight on a technical knockout. Kelly had Holt draped on the ropes helpless from body blows when the fracas was halted.

The first two rounds were comparatively tame, but the fun started in the third stanza when Holt floored Kelly twice for counts of six and nine. Kelly then sent Holt to the canvas several times for three counts. The bell ended the round at the second count. The next round was the end of Holt. He tried to nail Kelly with a finisher, but the latter caught him with a left hook to the stomach and was punching him at will while he was dangling on the ropes, when the referee called it quits for the night. Kelly weighed 142¾ and Holt 142½ pounds.

COVINGTON STOPPED

In what was scheduled as the main bout, Marty Gold, clever veteran flyweight, of Philadelphia, knocked out Eddie Covington, Negro, of Cuba, after two minutes and 38 seconds of milling in the third round. Covington, subbing for Frankie (Kid) Anslem, of New York, who showed up at the fight with a badly infected jaw, was the poorest substitute seen here in a long time. He could neither punch or take one.

It was just a couple of right hand punches landed on the side of his head that finished Covington. The first punch dropped him for nine and the last one helped things beautifully.

HEBNER STOPS POLO

Eddie Hebner, 136, of Clairton, technically knocked out Eddie Polo, 139¼, of the North Side, in the third round of the second six-round bout. The referee stopped the tussle to save Polo from further punishment.

The opening bout was a surprise. Tommy Anderson, 125, Negro, of the Hill, conceded seven and a half pounds to defeat Peaches Gallagher, of Swissvale. The bout, a six-rounder, was Anderson's second pro fight.

Red Robinson refereed all bouts, with Lou Meininger and Frank Brown as judges. Max Zuegschmidt and Tommy Grant keeping time. Ray Eberle was the announcer. Dr. M. R. Goldman was the commission physician. A poor crowd attended the second show of the season.

Temple Sets Down St. Thomas Eleven

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 4.—(AP.)—Temple University chalked up its second consecutive football victory of the season last night by running rough-shod over St. Thomas College, of Scranton, and winning, 28 to 2.

The Loudspeaker

Public Speaking.
Getting Radio-Wise.
Mellon Diffident.
Harrison's Satire.

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—With few exceptions, those in public life are fast mastering the technique of speaking over the radio.

Millions of words have tumbled out of the mouths of government officials since the national conventions agitated the air. The voices and deliveries of those who sit in the seats of the mighty in Washington are familiar to every main street and crossroads of the republic. The listeners of America — 50,000,000 of them — are not only cupping their ears to the big shots of politics, but are ready to cut off the big shots at a moment's notice by a quick twist of the wrist.

Louis Reid

It is this readiness to turn the dial at the first sign of boredom that has revolutionized public speaking in the nation. There is a growing tendency among the politicians to discard the old-fashioned oratory, to remove to a large degree the barnacles of bunk, to take refuge behind an appeal to reason, rather than behind a wall of words.

Most Politicians Now Radio-Wise

The politicians, to say nothing of those who may be called statesmen, are becoming more and more conscious of the exactions of the microphone. They know they must be brief. They also know they must be frank and informative and interesting if they would hold their audience. Such knowledge will undoubtedly have a wide effect. Certainly it will make a national convention more endurable to the eardrums.

We can even conceive of the nominating speeches at the national conclaves assuming force and color and dramatic eloquence in place of the bombast and tremulous windiness that hitherto, with painfully few exceptions, have been the rule.

According to those within close range of the microphonic assaults in Washington, earnestness is the outstanding characteristic of practically every political speech. Speakers with a message for the folks back home are the most serious and solemn of fellows. A breath of humor seldom overtakes them. Anecdote, so far as the loudspeaker is concerned, is as foreign as a coughing fit. Everything is sacrificed to the note of zeal. Yet zeal, when intelligently expressed, invariably keeps the armchairs occupied.

There are speakers in Washington who become so enthusiastic that they pound a table as their words go winging through the ether. Some address their listeners with low and resonant voices thoroughly appropriate to the microphone. In this class we would put Hoover, Borah, Wagner, Vandenberg, Robinson, of Arkansas, and Harrison, and, of course, the long radio-practiced Copeland.

Borah Dislikes The Microphone

Senator Borah, our operatives inform us, dislikes the microphone, though he appreciates its importance in reaching the people. To him there is no inspiration in speaking at a mere piece of metal. However, his dread of it disappears once a great audience is before him. He then feels the personal touch, gathers all those strange stimulations that come from the audience to any orator.

Secretary Mellon is as diffident before the microphone as in public, but once he has begun his speech he talks better over the radio than before personal audiences of whatever size.

Secretary of Labor Davis has a particularly self-confident air at the microphone. He should have. He's had more experience. He speaks as if his heart were in his job. On one occasion he sang—the first time in history that a cabinet officer ever burst forth in song on the radio. When he sings he is just as fervent.

Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, and Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, have excellent radio voices—clear and deep and booming. Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, has a voice as sonorous as a Shakespearean actor's.

Pat Harrison always arouses his radio audiences because of the clarity of his voice and the pungency of his satire. Senator Glass' voice is high and rasping but his style is arresting. He invariably holds his hearers. Were the broadcasters to distribute prizes for speaking, most of the awards would go to the Democrats.

Ruth Bryan Owen inherits her father's ability to feel at home when speaking to an audience. She invariably sits at the microphone and talks as if she were at the fireside of her friends.

Had broadcasting been perfected in the days of 1896 when her father stormed out of the West, there might have been a different complexion to the political history of the republic.

HEY! HEY!

It looked very much like George was "framed."

Those Beckwith Caterpillars are a merry crowd. They crawled right into the hearts of listeners.

Thousands of football fans were disappointed last night because the Duquesne-Detroit Tech game was not broadcast by KQV. This was all because the local station has to split time with a small station somewhere out in Ohio—Dayton, to be exact.

It's a crime that the second oldest broadcasting station in the world must take a back seat like this when Paul Miller, the manager, has shown every inclination to entertain the public with things of interest like the football games. The quickest way to get action is to write the Federal Radio Commission.

TODAY'S TID BIT:

A big crowd gather at the Duquesne Light Company booth last night when word was spread about the Garden that Amelia Earhart was greeting visitors there. A stranger had been introduced to Lelia Earhart—no relation of the aviatrix—and misunderstood the first name. He told all his friends.

WE NOW PRESENT

By DARRELL V. MARTIN, Radio Editor

Two celebrities—Jessica Dragonette, Don Bestor—occupy the spotlight in tonight's radio theater. Out at Duquesne Garden, where Manager "Jim" Simpson has been packing them in to see some of the world's most famous radio artists, one of our NBC favorites will entertain. When we think of Jessica Dragonette we always think of angels because of a little story we heard in Chicago two years ago when we met Jessica for the first time.

It was the story of how Jessica broke into the big time. She was just another soprano looking for the stage and an audience when Max Reinhardt, famous German director, cast her in "The Miracle."

* * *

"Jessie" played the part of an angel and never appeared before the audience. She was always in the clouds singing down.

"The angel," he said, "is the best voice. It is a beautiful, superb voice."

Critics took notice of this "unknown." Jessica later was cast in the "Student Prince," but was there only a short while until radio drafted her.

She stops in Pittsburgh tonight to learn that Billy Jones and Ernie Hare drew 13,000, McNamee 19,000 and Matt Thompkins 22,000 at the Radio Show.

Another celebrity on the air tonight—Don Bestor, king of dance rhythm—is to be welcomed back to the William Penn and KDKA at 7:30.

Don has put on a few pounds in the Wisconsin woods the last two weeks. But he's the same cheerful Don, glad to be with his Pittsburgh friends again.

We've had a lot of people ask us about Irene Beasley, the blues singer, who is making a big hit at the show.

Irene is one of the most charming network artists we've met. She's democratic, greets everyone with a nice "How do you do?" and has probably signed more autographs than anyone at the Garden.

We always enjoy Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," which is unmatched for its humorous description in music.

The composer opens softly, as if to put the listener in the mood for story telling—it is almost as though he were saying in music, "Once upon a time . . ." Then the music of Till Eulenspiegel himself begins—jerky, squirming, impudent, sly.

MISS HARD-BOILED

By JANE DIXON

CHAPTER LXX.

Jerry's people had received her cordially. They had accepted her as one of their own. She felt, though, that they resented her difference from their mold. Even the beauty they were forced to admit seemed a matter of suspicion to them, of intrusion. Secretly, she knew, the women among them envied her this supreme gift of the sex. Just as she could see spontaneous admiration of it, properly cloaked, in the eyes of the men.

Jerry's mother she adored. Jerry and his mother had entered into an open conspiracy to confound these stiff-lipped traditionalists to the limit of Raquel's might. They took delight in seeing eyelids fly open and mouths form a quickly suppressed "o k."

"I already love you, my daughter," the fine old lady at the big white house whispered to Raquel between her farewells. "But if you will keep my boy happy, if you will make him a good wife I shall come as near adoring you as it is allowed humans to adore one another."

Raquel was glad Jerry's mother had not imposed love into her bargain. As it was she could promise truly that she would fulfill the trust this mother gave into her keeping. But love! That she could not promise. She did not have it to give—had never had it. The Potter had left love out of the alchemy of her making.

Pancho was as when they left him.

Father's Desire

Raquel brushed Pancho's brow with the first kiss she could ever remember to have passed between them when she found him alert and full of graceful speeches upon their return.

Pancho hid it very skilfully but Raquel knew he was as startled, as embarrassed over the impulsive kiss as was she.

"I met a man from Spain the other day," he remarked with evident zest for the subject. "He's here on some kind of diplomatic mission. Comes from Cadiz. He was telling me about it. The Rojoses are of Cadiz. It is the seat of the family, since before the Inquisition. I'd like to go back there some time." He stopped short, as if his tongue had run away from him. And added, with a quick glance at Raquel, "I'd like to take Lucy."

Raquel nodded. As if he had made the most casual remark possible.

"It would be interesting," she said. "I'd like nothing more. We could do it, eh, Jerry? After we come back from the Orient and rest up a bit."

"Why not?" Jerry shared her enthusiasm. "We ought to show them what this country can do by way of senoritas."

"Senoras," Raquel corrected, laughingly.

She was troubled about the trip to the Orient. Restless to be away. She needed the rest, the change—because of the giddiness and the weak feeling she hadn't told anyone about. That hurried trip to the border with its attendant excitement and bodily fatigue had taken much from her. She had grown soft, unused to clash and to strain.

Doctor Puzzled

Jerry was still having his bad nights. The purple pools under his eyes were deeper, darker. His brow was damp and cold when she touched it to soothe his troubled tossing.

He insisted, however, that he had never felt so fit.

"That wise old owl of a specialist has forgotten all about me," he said. "He has given me up as a lost prospect."

Raquel knew better. Only that morning she had talked with the specialist.

"You don't think Dr. Logan—It's nothing really serious," she asked, alarmed by the stern set of his lips.

"Not so far as I have been able to tell," he answered with an air of professional mystery she could not penetrate. "One never knows. There are two or three phases of this case that have puzzled me. The symptoms are not unusual. The thing of it is they do not react to the treatments prescribed. This proves I have been on the wrong track. I have not found the seat of the trouble."

"But surely—"

"I shall be better able to judge of the extent of your husband's indisposition when the report comes from the laboratory. That must be within a few days at the most." With that he dismissed her.

Eric Married

Oh—if Jerry should—She squeezed trembling lids over her burning eyes. Drove away the little devils of fear that clutched and tore at her.

"Doctors are always like that," she assured herself. "They do it to give the impression they are earning their fees."

She remembered that Jerry had had a good night, the best for a week. And this morning he was so full of life and ebullient activity that she had shooed him out doors. He had gone off with Pancho for a spin up the Hudson to a country club where he had a "bundle of clubs on ice." He'd like to warm them up again. He might even challenge Pancho, who ought to swing a mean mashie, if shoulders were any measure of a golfer.

"I'll go with you," he promised.

The apartment seemed unbearably empty when she returned to it. There was a letter from Greta.

"I was out stepping among the hoity-toity last night," wrote the irrepressible one, "and who should I slap on the shoulder but Lord Eric Stafford—in person. He was there with Lady Eric. He calls her Cynthia, or something, but I don't mean maybe when I say Lady Eric. She's as cold as a landlord's heart, dearie. And the dear old bean simply reeks of the stables and the hounds. I mean Lady Eric. I think you pulled a dirty trick on his lordship. I bet he has to play 'Home Sweet Home' on a hunting-horn."

Alphonse to Return

"Alphonse plans to sail in a couple of weeks and I'm a part of the show. He's doing as well as can be expected, thank you. I've got him all pepped up to a 'Bless you, my children' pitch, so don't you go and spoil the act. You know that brass kettle I blasted on our way up from Deauville? I got it almost filled with used platinum cigaret cases and lighters and silver hip-flasks and what not. The motto hung on the handle is 'Take 'Em Before They Take You.'

"How's Jerry? Doting as usual, I suppose."

Eric Stafford married! He had walked in the way of tradition. If she had accepted Stafford! Why, then, she would never have had Jerry. This Jerry who came to her now, eager and warm. His lips covered hers.

"Great morning," he said. "Even if your father does think golf should be played with teacups. And whom do you think we ran across?"

"Who?" she asked catching his mood.

"Bertie Adams. He said he knew you dear. He read about our marriage. His congratulations were—well, I guess he meant business all right. We've poloed against each other a couple of times. What he can't do with a pony!"

Raquel watched this husband of hers with flickering eyes.

"I have word about the Orient," Jerry went on. "We hop off in about a month."

Fay King's Observations at Dinner Table Give Her Food for Thought

By FAY KING

The other night I was observing two couples at nearby tables.

At one table sat a good-looking dark young man, with a woman most attractive—for her age.

She beamed upon the boy like a smitten schoolgirl.

At the other table sat a decidedly elderly man being quite boyishly devoted to a young Juliette whom I noticed peeping shyly now and then at the handsome young man.

And do you know what I kept thinking?

I was wishing that the older man and woman, so adept in the arts of fascination and preservation, would flirt with each other—and then introduce the young people.

Learning of Detective Starting for New York, Madge Is Relieved

I did not need Mr. Hasbrouck's assurance that he and his friend, Mr. Train, were "having the time of their lives," in assisting us to escape the espionage of the private detective, who, for purposes unknown, had trailed us to the Catskills. The faces of both men were shining like those of schoolboys, and that oldest instinct of all, the zest of outwitting an opponent, was in their eyes.

"Your interest makes it very pleasant for me, nevertheless," I told them. "And so you saw the man finally start for New York."

"Yes," Mr. Hasbrouck replied. "After Ed reported about the fellow's going around to the hotels I knew it was only a waiting game. He'd never find you, even if by chance he found out where the Trains lived. Your car is locked up in the garage back here, and what he'd get out of the Trains would be plenty—that he wouldn't want to hear. And the chances were all against his finding Train. So Ed and I watched both streets, this one to the ferry and the one to the bridge, and I got my friend at the ferry again, and gave him an earful. So when our man in the black roadster came back in time for the next ferry, my friend was ready for him, and gave him a song and dance about somebody else taking his place for a few minutes at the ferry before, and that he had found out a blue sedan with three women in it had gone on board while he was absent from his post. My friend at the ferry is an awful good scout and he sent word to the fellow on the other side of Rhinecliff that if the black roadster chap buzzed him about the blue sedan he was to say he didn't remember distinctly, but he thought such a car had gone down the river road.

"Ed was watching things like a hawk, and when the man finally was safe on board Ed wheeled into line, too. He'll tail him without the man suspecting a thing. I'll bet a dollar, and he won't telephone unless he loses him. So, no news will be good news, and you'll be able to go back to your nap, Mrs. Graham, until we hear from Ed."

"Not I," I told him emphatically. "I'm so glad that Mrs. Underwood and my niece didn't awaken, for they need the sleep, and I don't need them. But I shall have to do some long distance telephoning. May I use your phone, and will you keep track of the calls?"

"Of course," Mr. Train rejoined, adding solicitously—"But I am afraid you need sleep as much as the others do. You look very tired."

"I am tired," I admitted, "but I am very strong, and I can make up sleep very easily. So there is no use of my trying to nap any more. If you don't mind, I'll telephone now."

"Is it imperative that you do it within the next hour?" Mr. Train asked.

"No, an hour's delay will not matter," I said, "if I can send a telegram immediately."

"Surely," he replied. "The reason I thought you'd better delay the telephoning is to keep the telephone clear for an hour, to see if Ed telephones. But you can phone your telegram from here. That will not take long."

"Thank you. Will you excuse me, please, while I write?"

I took from my bag a pencil and a piece of blank paper, and framed a telegram to Harry Underwood at the hotel in New York.

"Please stay at hotel today that I may keep in touch with you. Safe everybody well but black roadster, near, delaying our return. Will phone you later. M. G."

Mr. Train held out his hand for the paper as I rose.

"If you do not mind, I am more used to these phones up here," he said. "I can get through quicker."

"Thank you so much," I replied meekly, and was glad Mary's keen eyes were not watching this second "putting me in my place," as she would have expressed it.

But I had no fault to find with the efficient manner in which he put the telegram through, and asked for a report on its cost. When he handed me back the paper, he had jotted down the figures.

"You can keep track of these," he said tactfully, and then he drew a big armchair to the window.

"If you can't sleep you can at least rest," he said in kindly fashion. "This chair is much more comfortable than the one you have. You can even doze in it if you wish. I'll promise to call you in an hour. Will you excuse us now?"

Mr. Harbrouck followed him from the room.

I leaned back against those soft cushions, closed my eyes to relieve a smarting sensation which has been troubling me since my drive of the morning, and opened them an instant later, as I thought, to see Mrs. Train's pleasant face bending over me.

"Mr. Train sent me in to waken you," she said with pretty primness. "He said he promised you should telephone in an hour."

Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

After the growing period is finished, it is next to impossible to increase the height. Anyhow, pint-sized girls haven't any grievances. They can wear sassy clothes, and act sassy, whereas the tall beauty must be conservative in the selection of her garments and behave with dignity.

Conservative femmes are sticking to nail polish of the natural flesh tint. Chinese red looks gory, and drives critical individuals almost to deeds of violence, yet it is popular. It is observed that the gels who use the loudest polishes—not only red, but green, purple or black—are those who let their finger nails grow to extreme lengths.

The Marry-Go-Round

The Vanishing American Lover

most of them are shoved into it, by accident, fate or "the woman before the last."

There is a psychological moment in every love affair, at which it balances a while, and then either skids into an engagement or turns into an "entanglement."

Some women have eyes, whose "come-hither" signal across a ballroom is as loud and imperative as a fire-siren and as irresistible as the 12 o'clock whistle in a factory.

Nowadays, a butler or a husband who has seen "service" in the same family for 10 years is as rare and precious as a museum specimen or a treasured heirloom.

Silence and dignity look so much alike, and dignity and intelligence resemble each other so closely that a man, who knows just enough to keep QUIET, can easily pass for one of the Intelligentsia.

It was an unfortunate moment for women, when man discovered that he was "the noblest work of God;" but it has never seemed to discourage her from trying to put a few cultural and moral improvements on Heaven's Masterpiece.

If you sigh for an ardent lover, seek not a man in the first flush of youth—but a man in the last flush of Indian summer!

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have had so many letters lately asking me for the list of things that should be included in an average hope chest that I am going to answer all of these letters at once by publishing the list for the linen chest of the bride-to-be.

Twelve sheets, twenty-four pillow cases, four bed spreads, mattress covers, blanket covers of thin washable material, two single blankets for each bed, two summer blankets for each bed, one satin comforter for each bed, four tablecloths, one protective table pad, four linen table covers, twelve dinner napkins (large size, 27 inches), twenty-four medium-size napkins (20, 22 or 24 inches), twelve tea napkins, four or five breakfast and luncheon sets (centerpiece and matching doilies), twelve heavy bath towels, four bath mats, twenty-four face towels, twenty-four hand towels, six embroidered guest towels, twelve face cloths, six crash linen dish towels, six red-barred linen glass towels, twelve dust cloths, dish cloths, pot cloths, six roller towels for kitchen, iron-holders, two buffet scarfs and two dresser or bureau scarfs.

A Lady, a Gentleman and An Umbrella

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

To settle a dispute will you please answer the following questions?

1. When a lady and gentleman are out walking and it begins to rain, and only the lady has an umbrella, should she hold it over herself, or should her escort hold it over her or over both?

2. Is it permissible for her to take his arm crossing the street? R.

1. While it is obvious that, according to the strictly etiquette point of view, it is more gallant for the gentleman to hold the umbrella, it is often vastly more sensible and reasonable for the lady to hold her own umbrella. Usually she can protect herself more when she holds her own umbrella. But this is, of course, when the man does not wish to be "included" in the protection of the umbrella.

In the case of which you speak, when there is only one umbrella, the man can usually hold it in just as protecting a way as the woman can. And it is correct for him to hold it.

2. Yes, this is just the time when it is permissible for a woman to take a man's arm—when there is some reason for it. When they cross the street, when they are walking on an icy pavement, when they are walking in a very crowded place—then it is correct and gallant for the gentleman to offer his arm and say, "Won't you take my arm?" and he may add, "It's so slippery here," or something of the kind.

Well Planned

Plan your days so that you will save as many steps as possible. For instance, on Monday morning when the doorbell is constantly ringing, let your upstairs work go until afternoon and do all jobs possible down on the first floor, even to preparing the things for your evening meal. If you figure out the people you know are going to ring the bell, arrange your work to save as many trips downstairs as possible by being down there.

TELL IT TO SALLY

By SALLY MARTIN

Have You Got Them Too, Those 'Pee Wee Passions?'

Pity poor Connie! She's in a Terrible Fix! What is this fix? She's in love.

Of course, that isn't terrible in itself. But you see the trouble is she's in love with two of 'em . . . at the same time! And try as she will, she can't catch the eye of either one of 'em! And if that isn't a fearful jam to be in . . . especially at 14 . . . I dunno what is.

Tune in on this while I hunt me a nice, solid hair brush.

"Dear Sally—

"I'm in a terrible fix. You see I'm in love with two boys, and I doubt if either of them loves me.

"I am only 14 years old, and I guess you think that's too young to fall in love, but it's being done this season, and in this town, too. Roger is one of my beloveds, and Rudy is the other. Rudy has liked me for quite some time, but I have my suspicions that he is just "playing" me. We had a fight a few weeks ago, but he still pays attention to me, but I'm sure he doesn't mean it.

"And Roger! He's simply divine! But he doesn't act as if he loves me, although he used to. I really think I like him best, but he doesn't pay very much attention to me. I wish you could see both of them! The reason girls leave home! That's them. And you wouldn't blame me.

"All the other boys and girls have sweethearts to go with. I could have my pick of about three boys, but it's Rudy and Roger that I want. How can I get their attention?

"Another thing . . . Is it wrong to go riding with boys? I don't think so, but apparently my folks do. The boys I go around with are all 16 and 17, so naturally they have cars. And—oh, yes! Is there anything wrong in kissing your honey? All of us kids do, and if we don't we're considered 'flat tires,' but then Mother and Daddy got wind of it, and I certainly go —!!???!.

"Please don't think me silly. Remember, this letter is from one of the younger generation, who doesn't ever intend to be a modest little violet.

"Hoping you'll put me in my proper place—soon.

"CONNIE."

So you're "One of the Younger Generation" are you? Well, well, now ain't that sumpin'! And I suppose you think that Human History received an awful wallop when you got yourself born? Don't kid yourself, baby.

You're just a brat. Maybe some day you'll be a Nice Person—but at present you're just a half-baked young smarty, showing off. In love with two divine young Adonises, are you? Hooey? The only thing you're in love with, or ever have been in love with so far, is little Connie herself, in person. And you've busted into this column with your bunch of baloney, not because you're suffering from a couple of immortal Romances, but merely because you want to be noticed. Well, you're getting what you wanted. And I hope it helps what ails you!

And now that you know that I know your number, here are a few friendly tips. Beneath all your silliness and smartness you're just a real kid, dreaming of the love which will come to you some day. That's all right. Go on with your dreaming. You wouldn't be worth shucks as a female if you didn't dream of love at 14. But quit your grabbing at thrills. For if you don't, when the real Big Time comes around, you'll be just about as desirable as last year's wad of gum.

Love? It's a great game, kid. The greatest on earth for a woman. . . . If she'll wait for the right man and the right moment. But there's no game which will wreck or waste her worse—if she tries to play it before she's ready. And you're plenty of years short of being ready, youngster.

So, instead of fooling around with a lot of other young sprouts, trying to pretend you're wild, get wise, honey, and make yourself ready. Crash into your school work! Nimble up your brains! Go in for athletics! Pretty up your body! One of these days the Big Adventure will come your way, and when it does, what will it find?

A weedy, pimply, dough-faced body—spoiled by late hours and amateur antics?

Or a clever, compelling, radiant girl who'll make 'em run in circles?

What will Romance find, when at last it comes looking for Connie? That's up to Connie!

So get busy, kid! And wait until your ears are dry before you come crashing in here with your pee-wee passions.

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Foot Health in Winter Months

When cooler weather comes the feet require a lot of care. Many and many a person will have chilblains and painful feet from the beginning of winter till next spring. Most of these foot ailments are preventable and curable.

DR COPELAND

Lots of us show little common sense in the way we dress in cool weather. We have a certain date for putting on the "heavy underwear," and another for taking it off. No matter what the temperature may be during certain months, we wear the same heavy clothing. We may perspire and feel miserably hot, but that makes no difference. The calendar says we are in the season of cold weather and that settles it.

Thick, woolen stockings are worn from morning till night. In the warm house or barn these cause the feet to perspire and in consequence the stockings become moist. The moisture softens the skin and gets it ready to be chilled when the owner of the feet goes out into the cold. Trouble is sure to follow.

The thick stockings cause the boots or shoes to be crowded and to pinch the feet. Perhaps the foot covering is too small anyhow. This leads to pressure on the blood vessels and serious interference with the circulation in the feet.

To guard against any harm that may come from cold, the first rule is that the blood must flow freely through the surfaces of the body. When you get chilled you heat your arms and chest. Why? To get the blood going in the surfaces.

You can see that tight shoes will prevent free circulation and prepare the way for uncomfortable happenings. These are inevitable if you fail to get the right foot-gear.

City people suffer less from cold feet than do country folks. Most city homes have central heating plants. Not only are the rooms warm, but the floors are warm. Where the heating is from stoves the floors are cold for hours in the morning. The cellar under the living room is cold and this chills the floor.

Housewives, policemen, motormen, farmers—everybody having occasion to have the feet exposed to cold, should bear several things in mind. In the first place, the feet must be kept dry.

Have the shoes well fitted, but above all else have them big enough. They need not be monstrosities by any means, but buy good shoes and insist on having them properly adjusted.

Have stockings of different weights, so you can dress according to the temperature. Take pains not to have the stockings too short, as they are capable of confining the toes, producing corns and ingrown nails.

If you get home with thoroughly cold feet, don't stand over the register or put your feet in the oven. Take off your shoes and stockings and place your feet in cold water. Then dry and rub them with a coarse towel.

LUCKY GIRL

Cathie Is Held by Police For Questioning

CHAPTER XXXVI.

There were many men in the hall, Some of them wore uniforms, others did not. Some took notes, others just asked questions, with their hands in their pockets.

They talked to Cathie for a long time. She answered all their questions frankly, simply, with no reserve. The only thing she held back was the touching of the body, and the blood stains that Marguerite had tried to wash out of her clothes. She wished she had not done that now. It would have been better to have told it all, but since it was done. . . .

Marguerite was badly shaken as the result of the questioning. Her face was blotched and swollen, her eyes just red-brown gleams in the bloated, discolored wreck of new face. Under the cross-examination she broke down and admitted that Cathie had found the body and had run to her for comfort.

"I don't know why I said the other thing first," she said sullenly.

"Was it to shield Mrs. Farnsworth?"

Her pleading eyes found Catherine's. "No! She doesn't need shielding, that white, stainless one!"

And then, at the word stainless, she broke down and wept noisily again.

Asked Many Questions

Chester Farnsworth listened, making suggestions, talking in low, business-like asides to the inspector. He had hardly spoken to Cathie. He did not seem like the dead man's son, but like an official, one of the strange crew of those grim, tired-eyed men who asked questions.

It seems that there was some doubt about it being a suicide. Perhaps Mr. Farnsworth didn't shoot himself at all. Someone shot him. . . . Cathie hadn't thought of that, but it seems that the others had, all along.

"Galway will settle that suicide theory," someone said "He'll testify to the possibility of getting that hand far enough back to shoot. Now if the bullet . . ."

Cathie shut her eyes. She didn't want to hear about the bullet. She wished they'd call Galway, whoever he was, and get it over with. . . .

"Was he unhappy?" They were questioning her, again.

"Oh! No!" she roused herself. "He was always cheerful."

"There were no business troubles?"

"Not that I know of. I don't think he ever worried about money. He was so generous—extravagant, really."

"Did you ever quarrel?"

"Quarrel! Oh, no!"

"You didn't have any of the ordinary newly married people's quarrels . . . lovers' quarrels?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"I don't know. We . . . we weren't like most married people. We . . . Mr. Farnsworth was so very much older than I. We . . . we never quarreled."

The inspectors exchanged glances. Chester said something in an undertone.

Placed Under Arrest

"Was your husband ever jealous?"

Cathie sat up sharply. Caught the queer, knowing look in Chester's sallow face. "No! He had nothing to be jealous of!"

"That will be all, Mrs Farnsworth!"

Cathie sighed. Put her hands over her eyes. It occurred to her for the first time that she was free now . . . widow . . . She and Gordon . . . For the first time since the questioning began, tears came . . "Poor Alfred!" she sobbed, "Poor Alfred!" She was crying because in the midst of her great pity, in the midst of the horror and the trouble, that thought of their love shone like a star . . . They could belong to each other now, and she was thinking of that, of herself . . . while the man who had raised her from obscurity lay dead with a hole in his head . . . So she wept, because she couldn't care the way she ought to care . . . as a real wife would.

She was roused by the short Inspector with the sandy hair saying. "And now Mrs Farnsworth we'll have to be going" He had taken her arm.

"Going?"

"My dear girl, there are certain formalities that must be observed. In a few days I'm sure—"

They were all looking at her sympathetically, all those grim faced men.

"You aren't going to . . . to take me to . . . to . . ."

"Come, come. You've been so brave. You'll be treated with every consideration—"

"In jail?" Cathie began to laugh wildly. "I'll be treated with every consideration. . . . As if I cared . . . as if anything would ever matter again, after I. . . . But you can't mean it!" She began to pluck at the sandy inspector's sleeve. "I haven't done anything I've told you everything! I swear it! I don't know any more than you do—than Chester—"

Chester Unsympathetic

"Don't try to drag me in," Chester jerked out. "I can prove where I was!"

"Why Chester! Oh, no, no, no—you can't! You can't think that I . . . your father? . . . You do! Oh, my God, he does! He think that I—"

"Calm yourself. Now we'll just go along quietly and—"

"Take it easy, Mrs. Farnsworth, there's a good girl!"

Cathie jerked their restraining hands away. She cried in a loud, ringing voice, "He thinks I killed his father! I know! I can tell by his face. No—don't hush me. I've got to tell him. Chester, you MUST believe me. I know you haven't liked me. But you must know your father did. Oh, don't you see how he'd hate it? He couldn't rest if he knew you were thinking that—he couldn't ever rest—" She couldn't go on.

"You needn't try to work on my sympathies." Chester said "I know you too well."

"And I know you too well! You don't care about him! You never did. You're not thinking of him now. Just yourself—that's all—"

"Must this go on?" he asked coldly.

Taken to Jail

"Come Mrs. Farnsworth. Where's that girl? Here you, Maggie, get her hat and coat!"

"But I tell you I'm innocent. I didn't have anything to do with it! I went in, and I found him, and the gun was on the floor—"

A long drawn out sigh from Chester.

"You told us all that, Mrs. Farnsworth. You're just being held for questioning, that's all."

"Then you won't take me to jail? You'll take me somewhere else? Oh, you ARE going to take me to jail . . . But I won't go! I'm innocent and I won't go! Let me alone—let me ALONE! Oh, don't you see, it will kill my mother. She's getting old, and she's been sick. I just can't go—I can't—"

Somehow they had put her hat on her head. They were forcing her arms into the black galiak coat Marguerite had brought. Cathie was blind with tears—blind with grief, with helpless, hopeless anger. She struck out with her hands—felt the thud of flesh, as her hands struck someone's face. It didn't do any good—they were hustling her down the hall, pushing, prodding her, she was making a spectacle of herself. Mustn't do that . . . must straighten up . . . go decently . . .

The front door was just ahead. She saw Cheong, waxy-faced, expressionless, waiting in the hall. "Call Mr. Moore!" she gasped—"Get him for me—"

Then the cold, fresh air of the April morning struck her wet, tear-streaked face. Through her blurred, half blinded eyes she saw the curious crowd, men with cameras, pushing. She pulled the small black hat closer over her eyes, rolled the collar of her coat higher. With set teeth and head high she stepped into the closed car with the two inspectors.

The car started. She sat looking straight ahead of her, seeing nothing, knowing only one thing . . . she, Catherine Farnsworth, was on her way to jail, and it was only a matter of hours, minutes perhaps before Ma and Ruth and Mrs Hennessy and everybody, would know.

MINER GRANTED CITIZENSHIP

Toanstino Beltrame, 35, of Curtisville, a coal miner, whose divorced wife last Saturday testified in Federal Court that he was a "red Communist" and had sold liquor, yesterday was admitted to American citizenship by Judge R. M. Gibson. A large number of witnesses testified he was of good moral character and they believed he would make a good citizen.

When he appeared in court last Saturday for a hearing on his petition for naturalization, his former wife, her father and brother, gave damaging testimony against him. The case was continued for further hearing, on the plea of counsel for Beltrame, who called attention to the fact that the only detrimental testimony was that by the ex-wife and members of her family.

Immediately after the court acted favorably on the petition Beltrame took the oath of allegiance, administered before Judge Gibson.

STORM-PROOF CABLE LAID

Completion of a storm-proof cable between Pittsburgh and Butler and construction of additional facilities between Butler and Oil City has been announced by F. J. Chesterman, vice president of the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania. Work on the project was started August, 1929, and completed at a cost of more than $425,000. The project provides additional voice channels between Pittsburgh, Butler and Oil City and intermediate towns.

The cable extends underground from the telephone building in Seventh avenue to Wexford and from this point it is carried on poles to the Butler city limits, where it is again placed underground. Traversing a section frequently swept by severe sleet storms, the cable is encased in a lead sheath, which reduces to a minimum the possibility of storm damage.

Flier's Child Dies, Victim of Drought

MARTINS FERRY, O., Oct. 4.—The recent drought is blamed for the death of Jeanne A. Hammond, 6, Elmhurst, Long Island, who became ill while visiting her grandparents at Rayland, while her father, William C. Hammond, was piloting a National Geographical Society photographic plane over the West Indies and South America.

Doctors say the child is one of a score in Eastern Ohio who became ill from eating uncooked fruit which did not have normal stomach reaction due to lack of water during the growing season.

MILLION GIVEN BY BUHL FUND IN YEAR

Foundation Now Ranking 14th Makes Grants for Research and Education

Grants totaling $1,130,456 have been made by the Buhl Foundation during the first two years of its administration, the annual report submitted yesterday reveals. Increased during the last year by the second and final distribution of the executors of the estate of Henry Buhl, Jr., the assets of the foundation total $12,483,152. The foundation now ranks fourteenth among more than 100 American establishments of this kind.

Director Charles F. Lewis in his report says that in the grants of the first two years the foundation has sought to stimulate progress in the Pittsburgh district at the basis upon which conservative building must begin. The grants were intended to encourage the development of adequate actual ground work in economics and social research.

One grant was for a five-year program of research in coal, one of the keystones of the city's economic structure. It also provided funds for a four-year program of demonstration in the field of child guidance and pre-school education.

MINOR PART

Referring to the growth in number of American foundations, the report points out that the total of funds held by these organizations, about $900,000,000, constitutes a relatively minor part of the whole of American philanthropy. The report says the churches of the country, with invested funds and physical plants valued at more than four billion dollars, represent nearly five times as much wealth as all the endowed philanthropic foundations. The colleges and universities, with capital funds, plant and equipment estimated in 1926 at $2,294,000,000, represent more than two and a half times as much wealth as do the endowed foundations.

GRANTS FOR THE YEAR

Carnegie Institute of Technology—To equip a laboratory, $50,000; research in coal, $125,000. Total payable over a period of five years.

Historical Society of Western Pennsylvania—To a fund to provide an addition to society's building, $18,000, on condition that $82,000 be otherwise subscribed; and to conduct in that addition a program of collection, research and writing in the history of Western Pennsylvania, $70,000. Total payable over a five-year period, $88,000.

Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh—To establish and conduct a readers' advisory service as part of its program in adult education, payable over three-year period, $21,000.

Pittsburgh Child Guidance Center, Inc.—To establish and conduct a child guidance clinic and research center over a four-year demonstration period, $145,000; to establish and conduct a nursery school and research center over a three-year demonstration period, $23,000; total payable over period of four years, $162,000.

University of Pittsburgh—To carry on research work in the School of Medicine, total payable over period of three years, $30,000.

Inter-Racial Survey Committee—To complete a survey of certain social needs among the Negro population of the Third and Fifth wards, $1,000.

DAILY TRUE STORY

Grandstand Donovan

"There are two ways of flying a plane in this war. One is for the good of the squadron and the other is for personal glory."

Major Hampton was speaking in his usual blunt way, his words crisp and incisive. There was no mistaking his meaning.

"If you mean——"

"If the shoe fits, Donovan, you are entitled to put it on. I simply mean that I won't stand for any more grandstand flying. Do you understand?"

"Very good, sir!" he responded, saluting stiffly and striding from the room.

Outside, the cool night air struck him full in the face. "Grandstand" Donovan they called him. The name had stuck ever since he joined the Fifth Pursuit Squadron.

On his first flight with the Fifth they had gone out over the lines at dawn. Instructions had been specific. They were to take pictures of a new sector for the artillery. Under no circumstances were they to engage in combat or deviate from their course.

It had been Donovan's first flight. On their way back he had been unable to resist the temptation to swoop down and "strafe" the German trenches. That action had cost him a severe reprimand from Hampton and earned him the nickname of "Grandstand" Donovan.

Disliked by Hampton

He wouldn't have minded the reprimand so much, only——

Hampton had been his boss back in the States before the war. A serious mistake on Hampton's part had cost the factory a lot of money. Hampton had shifted the blame onto Donovan, resulting in the latter losing his job.

A queer quirk of fate had sent Donovan to the very squadron which Hampton commanded. [illegible] the day of his arrival he been riding him at le opportunity. on Donovan's high- ves, but there was nothing else to do but grin and bear it.

Motors were roaring in the hangars of the Fifth the next g, as Donovan entered ed where his Nieuport Mechanics trundled the ut on the field. Other planes were being wheeled into position ready for flight.

Silvery lances of light were piercing the gray horizon. A thin mist shrouded the valley, indicating low visibility. It was a grim portent of what they might expect up in the sky.

"We're flying in formation this morning, Donovan," explained Hampton curtly. "And I don't want anyone slipping off on their own. Remember that!"

"I'll remember!" returned Donovan, equally terse.

Crossing Lines

Singly the Nieuports took the air. Donovan's ship was the last in the formation. When the chocks were kicked from his wheels he pulled back the stick and climbed swiftly into the gray sky.

The squadron soared higher to get above the mist, the tiny ships hugging each other's tail in order not to lose formation. It was an easy matter to get lost on such a morning, and Donovan had no intention of giving Hampton any more loopholes for further lectures.

A quarter of an hour and they headed into a heavy bank of fog. Under ordinary circumstances they should have wheeled and headed back to their tarmac, but Hampton was obdurate.

"What's he thinking of, anyway?" growled Donovan. "Betcha two francs he loses some of his ships in this fog. And then he'll give 'em fits for getting out of formation. As a pilot he'd make a good doughboy!"

Dank and yellow fog wrapped itself around Donovan's wings. In another minute he had lost sight of the ships ahead. Then he slowed up a bit, fearful of a collision. When he emerged from the fog bank he was alone.

The rest of the squadron was neither ahead nor behind him. He climbed higher in an effort to locate them; then dropped a thousand feet. Still no Nieuports.

Grimly he flew to left and to right hoping in these lateral weavings to relocate the squadron.

"Now I will catch the devil!" Donovan muttered. "He'll accuse me of going off on a solo flight again. Oh, well! Perhaps something will turn up now!"

He grinned, keeping his eyes peeled for any lone Spads that might be scouting the sky. Save for the dim pounding of artillery, however, there was no indication that a war was in progress.

Donovan shrugged. "All sensible fliers are down on the ground where they belong on a morning like this! Guess I'll drop down a bit further."

In his downward flight he suddenly emerged from the mist. A fringe of woods rushed to meet him. Quickly he straightened out his ship, skimming the tree tops as he "gave it the gun."

In Distress

"Narrow escape, that!" he muttered. "Serve me right for coming down so fast! Might know I was pretty close to the ground."

Then he grinned again. A column of gray-green was emerging from the far end of the wood, deploying into an open field. A few bursts from his Brownings satisfied Donovan that his guns were in working order.

"A chance for a little fun after all!" he laughed. "Even if it's only strafing some troops!"

"I wonder—" he began, then stopped short. Closer inspection revealed the insignia of the Fifth Squadron. "One of our own pilots," he grunted, "and those Heinies are running toward him!"

Quickly he dipped down, heading toward the stranded ship. One wing was crumpled, the undercarriage shorn away . . . apparently from a hasty landing. Someone was standing near the propeller, gun in hand.

Donovan Praised

"Donovan!" shouted the major, running toward him. "You're just in time!"

"Hop in, quick!" retorted Donovan, grimacing as the major clambered into the cockpit behind him.

Bullets were already spattering against the fabric of the Nieuport, as the Germans rushed across the field.

Donovan laughed recklessly, as the ship rose off the ground when he pulled back the stick again. Guttural shouts of rage and a final splash of bullets against the plane's wings as he climbed swiftly into the sky.

Then his face sobered as he turned around in his seat.

"Lucky I came down to strafe those troops, sir!" he declared. Donovan could not resist that thrust.

Hampton grinned, a trifle shakily.

"Donovan," he responded, "you can strafe all you want from now on! And the first bird that calls you a Grandstand Pilot will have to reckon with me!"

WITH HORACE FRISBY IN DARKEST AFRICA!

Ujiji, Tanganyika, Outhsay, Afrikay.
By HORACE WALPOLE FRISBY
(The Flying Fool)

Today, friends—and may I include the ladies?—I will take up the ostrich. The ostrich is called "The King of Beasts." Or, among the natives, just "K. of B." How I outwitted these feathered friends, who kick you when you least desire it, has already become a myth among the aborigines. The natives love to "pazazza"—that is, come from near and far and give three cheers for Frisby, who they call "Ujiji," meaning Professor of Ostrichology." Well, as I said, to stalk the ostrich calls for courage, aye, courage! "Ujiji! Upipi! Ujiji!" declared the natives one day, meaning "Mr. Frisby, you certainly will have a difficult time with the ostrich, and we advise you not to try, though try you will, to be sure." I said nothing, but thanked them politely. Imagine their surprise when, reaching Ostrich-land, we sighted these birds to windward. They immediately became frightened and danced off, keeping just beyond range of my "ujiji," or fowling piece. I decided to beguile the ostrich. Powdering my legs to look like the graceful limbs of this symmetrical member of the chicken family, I placed on my shoulders an ostrich hide and thus disguised, it was impossible for the most critical eye to detect the fraud. Then, trotting gingerly toward the verdure on which the ostrich feeds, I proceeded to eat grass, and shake by plume feathers realistically. This was very convincing to the other ostriches who were by now ready to make friends—and more—I can assure you. In fact, one big fellow gave chase. I finally broke the spell by kicking him soundly, and thus laid him prostrate. If you ever saw a broken ostrich you will know how he looked from his great, wondrous eyes. I shall never forget. It is one of these things I would rather not talk about. Oh, well....as a result we had delicious friend ostrich for weeks. And what is more tasty than a cold ostrich wing? To make a thrilling story short, let me say that the natives applauded me to the echo, yes, to the echo! They dubbed me "Ujiji" which means "intrepid bird man."

Polling Places Open Until 10 Tonight—Brief Comments on Local Events.

Good as their intentions may have been, the Liberal Party and the Crusaders have bungled things sadly by their amateurish methods in the political campaign now under way. Their chief blunder was in failing, after indorsing John M. Hemphill for Governor, to indorse anti-dry candidates for the Senate and House of Representatives, where the struggle against prohibition must be waged.

*It is scarcely to be wondered at, under the circ*umstances, that suspicion has been aroused among the wets themselves. Thus William S. Adams, who was Central Pennsylvania chairman for the Bohlen-Phillips anti-dry ticket in the Republican primaries, and who aided in pre-empting the name "Liberal Party," has repudiated it with the sarcastic comment that it is "one-half of one per cent wet."

*The Crusaders blundered in appointing on com*mittees to work for Hemphill's election citizens who, while opposed to prohibition, are for Gifford Pinchot for Governor because of the other issues involved in the campaign. Former Congressman James M. Magee has expressed the matter well. In withdrawing from the Crusaders' executive committee, he said he felt that to support Hemphill merely because Pinchot was dry would be paying too high a price for the little the Governor could do for modification or repeal.

The Crusaders have also made a tactical mistake in placing on their committees that are to work for Hemphill's election men officially connected with the Power Trust and the coal and iron police system. They have thus given some basis for the suspicions voiced by Adams in his statement that "the prohibition issue is being prostituted for political gain by public utilities in the gubernatorial campaign" and by Magee in his remark that while the Crusaders may not be aware of it he strongly suspects that "the Liberal party has been drawn them into an anti-Pinchot rather than a pro-wet campaign."

The Crusaders have enlivened the campaign at a rate. They can be expected to profit in subsequent elections by the mistakes they are making in this one. It is a pity that the prohibition issue cannot be considered by the voters independently of the other issues involved in the present campaign. If there were nothing else before the people, Hemphill would stand a good chance of being elected. As it is, he is sure to receive a large vote—the largest, possibly, that has ever been given any Democratic candidate for Governor in Pennsylvania.

The campaign promises to become hotter and hotter as election day draws near. Apathy will disappear and citizens who have neglected to qualify for voting will regret their negligence. As this is being read there may still remain an opportunity to register. The polling places in Pittsburgh are to remain open for that purpose from 4 to 10 o'clock this evening.

The Safety Congress has adjourned, Safety Week is drawing to a close, and, thank goodness (Let's rap on wood!), we have had no disaster like the Equitable Gas explosion which made a mockery of Safety Week several years ago. The convention, we believe, is entitled to be called a great success, although, in the truest sense, its success will not be determined until our accident record from now on is scanned. Some valuable lessons in accident prevention have been taught. Let it be hoped that they have been well learned.

So John Kane, the "Strip" house painter, alone among the Pittsburgh aspirants, has again had a picture chosen by the jury for admission to the Carnegie International Exhibition! Penelope Redd says local artists are both puzzled and affronted by the recognition given Kane. The local laity will be tickled. To persons unacquainted with the mysterious canons by which modern authorities on art judge paintings, Kane's pictures are just as interesting and attractive—and maybe a little more so—than some of the canvasses that have taken high honors in recent years.

And that brings up again the perennial, and never satisfactorily answered, question: What makes a picture great? It will be asked many times, no doubt, by the bewildered public, when the International opens. Is it beauty? Prizes have been awarded again and again to pictures which every unsophisticated person would unhestitatingly call ugly. Is it fidelity to truth? Many a prize-winning canvas has been distorted and unnatural, false in color, false in its lines. Is it the striking or unusual character of the subject? Here again there is evidence, in the dull and uninteresting pictures that have been honored, that the answer may be in the negative. It is a question, apparently, which everyone must answer as suits himself.

We don't blame Judge Frank P. Patterson, of Common Pleas Court, for being disgusted on being asked to grant a divorce to a woman who admitted having married her husband hastily after an acquaintance of a few days at roadhouse parties. The remedy seems to lie in legislation forbidding spur-of-the-moment weddings. Some states require an intermission of several days between the time of applying for the marriage license and the time of its issuance. It is doubtful if such a requirement works a hardship in one case out of a thousand.

The Department of Forests and Waters reports that Pennsylvania towns and cities that draw their water from well fostered watersheds suffered comparatively little from water shortage in the recent drought. The forests acted as reservoirs, storing water in their spongy humus in times of heavy rainfall and giving it out slowly. This confirms the wisdom of the Flood Commission of Pittsburgh in working for the establishment of the Allegheny and Monongahela National Forests as one of the means for helping to protect the city from high water in the spring and excessively low water in the summer. But storage reservoirs to be constructed by damming the headwaters of the rivers are also needed to complete the flood protection system.

Commissioner Benjamin G. Eynon, of the Motor Vehicles Bureau, announces that applications for 1931 automobile registration will be mailed to car owners October 15. It would help greatly to avert the confusion and annoyance that have always been in evidence at the end of the year because of motorists' delay in procuring licenses if those who are accustomed to postpone sending in their applications until the last moment would act promptly.

"Bugs" Baer Says:

Up and Atom

An otherwise unemployed scientist has succeeded in cracking an atom. A scientist is a man who goes haying with a fine tooth comb instead of a rake.

To split an atom up into subdivisions indicates that the world has been revolutionized and you can expect a rising market any minute.

To fully appreciate this titanic feat let us first discuss the atom. It is smaller than a molecule. And a molecule could get sore feet trying to walk around a quinine pill.

Two atoms of oxygen and an atom of hydrogen make one molecule of water. That's important information even if you haven't got any facts about it. You haven't even got a bird bath.

Why does a scientist take a swing at an atom? The pitching in the National League is much easier.

The atom was cracked in a million dollar machine bought by philanthropic donations from our most palatial bootleggers and designed by Rube Goldberg.

It took three years of steady pounding to break its morale. Prominent philosophers of the world were invited to listen to the cracking of the atom.

Nobody heard it, but they all went, "Ah!"

It was the finest thing ever done to a thing that couldn't fight back.

But there is a moth still under the lapel. Suppose it was not a perfect atom and had been born cracked? Was it a domestic atom or would it have grown a shell?

So all the years of patient eavesdropping and expenditure of money has been wasted. If the experiment is a success it is still wasted.

The reason why a scientist never orders a grapefruit for breakfast is because he can see it.

The only thing he enjoys is something microscopic that you have got to locate with a set of opera glasses keyed up to concert pitch.

The atom is found and it is cracked. Which puts it in a dead heat with the scientists.

There will be a public demonstration of long distance atom cracking next week in the Yale Bowl.

Isn't It So?

A man may be a mightly good story teller—till he gets home and tries to explain to his wife.

WHAT IS LIFE?

By Archibald Henderson

A popular song of the day is entitled "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Unfortunately, the author is unable to solve that eternal mystery. Ernst Haeckel wrote a great scientific treatise entitled "The Riddle of the Universe." But even he could not solve it, with all his knowledge, insight and acumen.

Even the great scientist Darwin stands baffled before this great mystery, behind which lies the figure of a benevolent creator. In his "Origin of Species" he says:

"It is interesting to contemplate a tangled bank, clothed with many plants of many kinds, with birds singing on the bushes, with various insects flitting about, and with worms crawling through the damp earth, and to reflect that these elaborately constructed forms, so different from each other, and dependent upon each other in so complex a manner, have all been produced by laws acting around us . . . There is grandeur in this view of life with its several powers, having been originally breathed by the Creator into a few forms or into one; and that, whilst this planet has gone cycling on according to the fixed laws of gravity, from so simple a beginning endless forms most beautiful and most wonderful have been, and are being evolved."

All through the ages philosophers and scientists have been trying to supply some definition of life. Most of these definitions seek to take account of the continual flux which characterizes the vital process. The best minds of all generations have made attempts to formulate a definition of life. But the problem is far too complex to be summed in a few lines of definition.

Some of the definitions are merely negative in character, and in no sense illuminating. For example, Bacht defines life merely as "the sum total of the functions which resist death," such a definition does not get you anywhere.

Aristotle gives a better definition when he describes life as "the assemblage of the operations of nutrition, growth and destruction." But this is not a definition of life; it is merely a description of the different phases through which life passes. De Blainville gives a ponderous, but scarcely helpful, definition of life as "the two-fold internal movement of composition and decomposition, which takes place within an individual without destroying its identity." Perhaps the most highbrow definition of life ever attempted is that of Herbert Spencer: "The definite combination of hetrogeneous changes, both simultaneous and successive, in correspondence with external co-existence and sequences."

All of these definitions are cited by L. L. Woodruff in "The Origin of Life." But he outspokenly confesses: "Although many physiochemical phenomena contribute to life, not one of them will serve as a criterion and all of them collectively do not offer, as yet, a satisfactory explanation. . . All will undoubtedly admit that we are at the present time utterly unable to give an adequate explanation of the fundamental life processes in terms of physics and chemistry. . . . Certainly the twentieth century finds relatively few representative scientists who really expect a scientific explanation of life ever to be attained.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

Why isn't Christianity as popular as it once was?
Why are young people more interested in
The exploits of Lindbergh and Coste and Byrd
Than in the exploits of Jesus Christ?
Perhaps this is why:

We spend all our time in teaching that Jesus was a God—
We quite forget to teach that He was also A gypsy!
We recall how He told men to save their souls,
But we omit to mention that He also taught them
To risk their lives!
We make wonderful sermons about His heavenly home,
But we hastily pass over the fact that
He left His earthly home and spent much strength
In preaching against the dominance of homes,
And the danger of possessions,
And the general futility of being
A stick-in-the-mud.

There have been times when Christianity
Gripped men like a madness.
During the Crusades, when men went on long adventures,
Waged furious campaigns and had a glorious good time
Serving God and raising Cain,
Christianity was popular.
Or under the Roman persecution,
When men fought lions in arenas
And hid in caves and were burned as torches
In a flame of defiance,
Christianity was popular.

Whenever Christianity became a fight for freedom,
A reckless crusade, a splendid defiance
Of the status quo,
It was popular with men.
And, if you'll honestly think it over,
You'll have to admit that was the only time
When Christianity would have been popular
With Christ Himself.

For Christ was no admirer of safety.
He didn't spend His time trying to get in right
With the Proper People and keeping out of jail.
He went out looking for a fight.

He openly boasted that He came to "bring a sword."
He snooted—in classical terms, to be sure,
But nevertheless it was snooting—
At steady jobs and bank accounts and family ties
And all other arrangements that kept the human soul
Bound and smug and afraid to take a chance.
As for Himself, He took all the chances there were;
Took them with His eyes open,
Even the chance that led to the cross—
And never whimpered.

Tell that to young people.
Tell them about Christ's courage and recklessness
As we tell them about Lindbergh's and Byrd's.
Teach them to respect their own curiosity,
As He respected His curiosity;
And to develop a healthy impudence
As He developed His impudence.
Teach them to doubt and ask questions,
To risk and rebel, to take any chance
For the sake of their hunger for Truth.
Teach them that poverty doesn't matter,
And loneliness doesn't matter,
And slander doesn't matter,
And even death doesn't matter
As long as they somehow find God

Stop talking about salvation—
Stop babbling about respectability—
No ardent young soul ever worries about salvation,
Or gives a hoot for respectability.
Ardent young souls want only adventures—
Adventures for freedom.
Make Christianity an adventure again;
Forget about Christ the God
And bring back Jesus the Gypsy,
And Christianity will be popular again.
AS POPULAR AS IT WAS WITH CHRIST HIMSELF.

Worst Story I Have Heard Today

By WILL ROGERS.

You've probably heard about the old-fashioned airplanes that they have parked out on some of these government aviation fields. The planes was made before the war, and they've got a pre-war kick in them. Sometimes they kick over the traces and make a bad spill and then the newspapers has a big story. But generally the army men manage to make the thing fly, and sometimes they even train a recruit with one of them.

I was told not long ago about a young guy that was trying to be an aviator at one of these flying fields that hasn't got any wings to speak of, and the officers had done the best they could with what they had on hand. Finally it was time for the young guy to fly the plane all by himself, and he went up, with an instructor in the seat behind him. There was a real strong wind blowing from the southeast, and the officer told the guy to head right into it and in four hours he would be in Mexico City, where he was expected by the Mexican government. Well, the boy drove the old boat as hard as he could, but the wind was mighty strong and the engine on that old relic was mighty weak, and when he came down at the end of six hours he landed right on the same field he took off from. When he saw the soldiers coming over towards his plane, he says to the instruction officer:

"Well, it's darn nice of the Mexicans to have these here American soldiers here to welcome us, ain't it, Captain?"

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE

By H. G. WELLS
In Collaboration With
Prof. Julian Huxley and George P. Wells.

IV.—Is There Purpose in Evolution?

A great deal of evolution is a response to change in that living environment. The horse's speed is a response to the increasing speed of its devourers; its tooth-structure a response to the spread of tough grasses over its feeding-grounds. Environment, in this extended sense, determines evolution—indirectly, by the sifting, trial-and-error method of selection, but none the less surely.

An organism apart from its environment is meaningless; if the environment had been different, so would the organism. If this earth were bigger, all the mechanical construcuture of land animals would be different, for the force of gravity would be greater.

H. G. Wells

If the surface of the earth were perpetually shielded by clouds from the sun's ray, as on some other planets, the human inhabitants of the tropics would not be black.

Before the power of color-vision was evolved there can have been no animals which practised concealment by adopting the color-pattern of their surroundings, as chameleons or leaf butterflies do today.

The result of Evolution and Natural Selection is a constant increase in fitness. But there are limitations to the perfection of fitness attained. Trial-and-error is a rough and ready method. What it produces is something that will work, by no means necessarily something that will work perfectly.

The creatures that exist are those that happen to have survived; taken together they represent an equilibrium which manages to be more or less stable, rather than life's best possible way of utilizing and sharing out the resources of earth.

But—and now we begin to touch on the question of purpose—as far as we can see the variations which alone make evolution possible are random variations. That is not to say that they may not be limited in quantity and quality, but that from the point of view of evolution they are at random. In every organism they take place in many directions; the environment, acting through struggle and selection, picks out those that are headed in one particular direction.

The identical variation that is selected and kept in one environment may be rejected in another.

Once we realize this we must give up any idea that evolution is purposeful. It is full of apparent purpose, but this is apparent only, it is not real purpose. It is the result of purposeness and random variation sifted by purposeless and automatic selection.

The term purpose has a very definite meaning. It is a psychological term, describing a certain familiar state of our own consciousness; it implies the pre-vision of an end, and a determination to reach that end.

For evolution to be purposeful one of two things must be true. Either living things themselves must be purposive in their evolutionary changes—the flower must somehow want to attract bees, the horse intend to lose all its toes but one, or else although the living animals and plants themselves betray no purpose, purpose must exist in the mind of a divine Being, who is manipulating life and its environment to bring about his purpose, as we manipulate matter and events to bring about our purposes.

The first alternative is that of Bergson and Shaw, and, as we have seen, we must dismiss it. Variation and selection in themselves are blind. Life is by them passively moulded towards adaptation and perfection, and is not the arbiter of its own destiny.

The forms of life are as much the automatic product of other forces as the forms of mountains, lakes and valleys, although the machinery of their production is different.

The second view is the view of a number of more or less modernist theologians. It is Creationism up-to-date. Instead of creation of the whole scheme of things ready-made, it implies the gradual working out of a preconceived plan, the gradual realization of a divine purpose.

This may, of course, be true. Science cannot say yes or no to such ultimate questions.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—Harlem's Black Belt has evolved a style consciousness all its bright particular own. Sometimes savage, usually colorful, it is always arresting. The sepia strutters above 125th street are as different in dress from down town New York as Tunis from Topeka.

There are tailors in the area who do their own designing, distinctly for the ebony Brummels of their clientele. Broadway, Fifth avenue, Bond street or the Prince of Wales exercise no influence whatever on Lenox avenue or its Pomander Walk, known as Striver's Row—"for those who strive."

The potpourri of fashion erupts a lava of riotous color effects. This autumn the main offering consists of splendorous overcoats, with huge airplane wing shoulders, broad velvet collars, slashed pockets and flapping bottoms that fall within an inch of the ground.

There are belts set high and ranging from six to 12 inches in width. The spirit of minstrelsy in Darkest Gotham is evidenced in large bright buttons from pearl to robin red. The derbies range from milk white to dark purple. In type it may sound grotesque, but there is a barbaric beauty about it all.

Coats to suits are cut hip short with enormously ballooning shoulders. The trousers may be mile-wide or as tight as tights on a circus skeleton. Shoes are needle pointed patent leather with flamboyant cloth tops and spats take in all colors of the spectrum.

This season brown predominates for suits from the brown of autumnal leaf to deep chocolate interspersed with green and purple. An unholy clash of color is achieved by wearing a yellow hat with a red tie or a brown hat with a pastel pink four-in-hand tucked in the trousers like a shirt tail a la Duke Ellington, Harlem's Paul Whitman.

Sundays there is a promenade with trailing great coats a feature. They are worn in hot weather if the sky is clouded, the threat of rain providing the excuse. The dandiacal "sweet men"—or gigolos—are tall and thin and how the dusky belles adore them!

Harlem walking canes deserve at least a snip of a paragraph. They are of wood stained in gay colors with gold heads. Some are spangled with chip diamonds and when twirled at night give off a glittering pin wheel effect. Skiddle-de-scow! And cha-cha-cha!

Many wondered, at least I did, how George Jean Nathan, so often seen squiring about Lillian Gish, would handle his review of the short-lived play in which she starred last season. After eulogizing the play, Nathan throbs: "The very excellent company includes—and were it not that I should and unquestionably rightly be accused of prejudice, I'd like elegantly to expatiate—the most lovely Lillian Gish." It was a little long winded but quite pretty withal.

Perhaps most natives know it but only today did I learn that the English gave New York its present name in honor of the Duke of York. The same interrogative gentleman, who has only lived here four years, wanted to know if I knew the first name the Dutch gave the island. I didn't let on I heard him and looked it up at home. It was Mauritius. I wish newspapers would quit advertising me as such a New York authority.

A cynic special delivers the blowing up of the Maine may have been caused by Spaniards hearing the Stein song and that had just reached the waste basket until this one was opened: "Ima Drunque is a beautiful file clerk in a Wall street financial house."

Also zips a rather curt note from my syndicate lords announcing: "Ten returned letters signed by you were addressed to as many principal cities, each being addressed to a wrong state. This seems unusually careless." [illegible] a dandy on cities but weak on states.

Fifteen years ago I could rattle off the capital of every state and name the Presidents in rotation. But the riveting finally got me.

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. Mundy

It keeps him busy concocting excuses for being late to dinner.

The demands of business are such that he cannot do needed work about the house.

He announces that he is not particular to have meals at scheduled times.

That the family have any claim on his presence at meal time is something he does not seem to consider.

Calling up at a late hour to say he cannot get home to a dinner, which has been prepared with regard to his particular likes and dislikes, does not make for peace in the home.

Coming home joyful as the result of a couple of hours with a congenial companion does not solace the feelings of one who has worked hard to get up a good dinner.

Being grouchy because it is not kept warm until a late hour is the one thing that will stir up any wife.

If you are late, be a good sport, don't ask for service. Pick up what you can find on the pantry shelf and say as little as possible, if you don't want to precipitate something.
